S. African-U.S. relations hit new low

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Relations between the United States and South Africa reached a new low Friday, with the United States recalling its ambassador for "consultations" about the situation.

After White House meeting with President Carter, Sec. of State Cyrus Vance announced that he had asked Ambassador William Bowdler "to return to Washington for consultation on recent events in South Africa."

State Dept. spokesman Hodding Carter III said that the consultations could result in further actions by the United States.

THE DEPARTMENT'S careful refusal to openly describe the recall as a sign of U.S. displeasure was apparently designed to leave some doubt in the minds of the South Africans.

Hodding Carter said the South Africans continue to be helpful in the larger question of negotiations about the racial future of Rhodesia and Southwest Africa.

Carter said that Bowdler would return to his post "in a few days," but he would not say whether the ambassador might be recalled permanently later.

State Dept. officials trace the escalation of tensions in U.S. South African relations to May, when Prime Minister John Vorster and Vice President Walter Mondale met in Vienna. South African officials trace it back further than that, to January and the advent of the Carter administration and its emphasis on human rights.

THE MONDALE-Vorster meeting was tense, and the South Africans were openly angry about an off-hand remark by Mondale at the end of a news conference when he suggested that the Republic of South Africa should go to a system of one-man, one-vote.

One State Dept. official said later, "It was unfortunate that Mondale's news conference didn't end 30 seconds sooner."

Although the South Africans continued to cooperate in the efforts to persuade the Rhodesian government to accept an Anglo-American plan and negotiated solution, bilateral relations worsened further when the State Dept. expressed official concern about the death of Steve Biko, the black African leader who died in a South African prison.

Then the State Dept. described the recent South African roundup of opponents of apartheid as "unfortunate" and a "step backward." Vorster, in a political speech, described the American reaction as "totally irrelevant" and in recent interviews he accused the United States of trying to overthrow the White South African government.

The recall of the American ambassador was the latest step, but the State Dept. spokesman indicated that it will not be the last one.

Lawsuit will charge fraud to Schneller

by BILL HILL

A lawsuit charging Schneller Furniture Co. of Arlington Heights with deceptive business practices and consumer fraud will be filed Monday by the Illinois Attorney General's office.

The charges stem from the company's advertising and prices during its "going out of business" sale that ran from Aug. 25 to early October.

The lawsuit will be filed in Cook County Circuit Court by the consumer fraud and protection division of the attorney general's office, which has been investigating the company for about seven weeks.

NEWSPAPER advertisements and signs in the company's store at 17 S. Dunton Ave. said shoppers would save 20 to 60 per cent on all items, which the lawsuit insists was false and fraudulent advertising, said Donald Mulack, chief of the consumer fraud and protection division.

"In fact, there were no savings whatsoever. It cost the customers more money to shop at the sale than it did before the sale. The so-called sale prices were higher than the pre-sale prices," Mulack said.

Named in the suit are Camille J. Burny Jr., president and treasurer for the Schneller Furniture Co., and Martin Goodman, a salesman in charge of the liquidation sale.

Burny, of River Forest, has been the sole owner of the furniture store since January when he purchased the interests in the company held by Joseph Schneller.

Burny and Goodman are charged with violating the Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and the Deceptive Trade Practices Act of Illinois, Mulack said.

THE MAXIMUM penalty of $50,000 is being sought from each man, he said.

"We're seeking the maximum penalty because we found intentional violations of the law. They concealed from customers the true pre-sale prices," Mulack said.

"We have a very strong case," he said.

Mulack said that when the liquidation sale began Aug. 25, price tags on the furniture at the store showed three figures: the old price, the sale

MORE THAN 300 persons Friday night heard the Chicago Symphony Chamber Players play Beethoven as part of the sixth anniversary celebration at Woodfield Shopping Center in Schaumburg.

Chamber adds class to mall fete

by LAURA SCHMALBACH

They had to compete with squealing microphones, squirming children and several patrons who were more intent on comparing new purchases than appreciating the intricacies of the third movement.

But even if conditions at Woodfield Shopping Center Friday night were a little less than ideal, the Chicago Symphony Chamber Players led off the center's sixth anniversary celebration with plenty of aplomb. And while the dignified strains of Beethoven's Septet may have been a distinct contrast to Woodfield's usual hum of organ music, water fountains and squeaking strollers, most of the 300 center court fans seemed delighted with the irony.

"This is just great . . . it goes to show that music like this doesn't have to be stuck in a concert hall," said Lynn Anderson, a Mount Prospect college student. She and her parents made a special trip to Woodfield to hear the Chamber Players, and while she was quick to criticize the poor sound system, Ms. Anderson was glad she came: "It's wonderful to see how they're fascinating everyone that walks by."

AND FASCINATING the musicians were, especially to the younger members of the audience.

Musician Dale Clevenger interrupted his tune-up to show off his French horn to a wide-eyed group of young boys. An animated pre-teenager pulled excitedly on her father's arm, announcing in a loud stage whisper, "Hey, we studied that guy (Beethoven) in school last semester!" One lad in the front row spent the hour filling in for the missing conductor — when he wasn't punching his younger brother.

The older generation got into the act, too: several classical music aficionados sat attentively on the hard steps, nodding their heads to the tempo and applauding warmly at the end of each movement.

To be sure, many younger listeners

Kiritsis innocent by insanity in kidnaping case

INDIANAPOLIS (UPI) — A jury Friday night found Anthony Kiritsis innocent by reason of insanity on all counts of kidnaping businessman Richard Hall and holding him captive for 2½ days with a shotgun wired to his head.

The verdict followed almost three full days of deliberations. It meant Kiritsis had a good chance of going free on bond.

The panel of seven men and five women found that although Kiritsis was innocent by reason of insanity, Kiritsis actually abducted mortgage company executive Richard Hall and held him hostage for 2½ days.

THE VERDICT was announced by Marion County Superior Court Judge Michael Dugan in front of live television cameras.

Kiritsis, 45, of Indianapolis, stood calmly as the decision, reached after 33 hours of deliberation, was read. Then he hugged both his defense attorneys — Nile Stanton and Richard Kiefer.

Kiritsis was charged with kidnaping, armed robbery and extortion.

Dugan said a competency hearing would be Nov. 9. However, both defense and prosecution attorney had speculated Thursday it was likely that Kiritsis would go free based on psychiatrists' testimony during the trial.

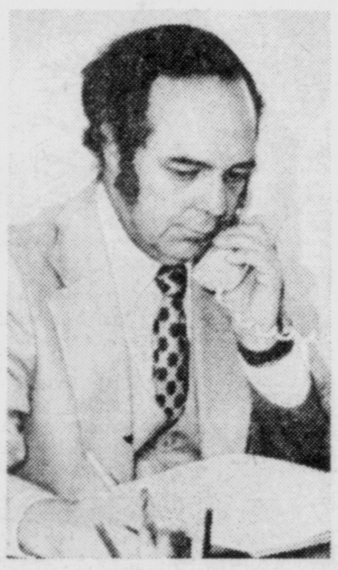
KIRITSIS, testified he leashed a sawed-off shotgun to mortgage company executive Richard Hall's neck, marched him through downtown Indianapolis and commandeered a police car which took them to the defendant's apartment last February.

He held Hall for 63 hours, releasing him after receiving a phony $5 million promissory note from Hall's family firm and a false promise of immunity from prosecution.

"We have a problem as to the time period of illegal kidnaping," said a note signed by jury foreman Gregory Rach. "According to the law, did Mr. Kiritsis kidnap only on the 8th or was he in violation of the kidnaping statute on the 9th and 10th also?"

The judge sent back a note saying, "I cannot answer your question as phrased," prompting a motion for a mistrial from defense attorney Nile Stanton.

FBI agent felt hijacker had suicidal tendencies



FBI AGENT Don Cochran of Atlanta Friday said the FBI determined in talks with hijacker Thomas Hannon that he probably would release the 15 hostages and might take his own life.

ATLANTA (UPI) — The FBI agent who talked Thomas Michael Hannan into releasing hostages from a commandeered Frontier Airlines jet said Friday he quickly determined Hannan probably would free his captives, and felt there was a "distinct possibility" he would take his own life.

The agent, Don Cochran, was right on both counts. Hannan, a 29-year-old bank robbery suspect from Grand Island, Neb., killed himself Thursday night with a sawed-off shotgun more than 13 hours after he commandeered the jet in his hometown and forced it to fly to Atlanta in a futile bid to free his buddy from jail.

He fired the fatal shot into his chest aboard the Boeing 737 minutes after releasing 11 passengers as his lawyer pleaded with him to surrender.

NINETEEN OTHER passengers had been let go during a refueling stop in Kansas City and Hannan released two stewardesses six hours after the jet landed at Atlanta. Hannan held the pilot and co-pilot hostage until the end.

"The first hour of any negotiation is the crucial hour," said Cochran, 47, a 28-year FBI veteran. He served as the direct link between a battery of FBI specialists and Hannan.

"It's when you establish your evaluation of the individual. Although the safety of the hostages was still in question, I felt optimistic about being able to obtain their release. But Mike came on with strong indications of suicidal tendencies."

Another of those who negotiated with Hannan, attorney J. Roger Thompson, said he spent "abut 30 minutes on the plane with Hannan trying to dissuade him from taking his own life."

"I DON'T THINK he was necessarily unstable," said Thompson. He said in the final hours Hannan apparently saw death as the only alternative to a long prison term.

Hannan had demanded $3 million, two parachutes and the release from the Fulton County Jail of 29-year-old George David Stewart, his codefendant in the Sept. 2 robbery of an Atlanta Bank. Hannan was out on bond in the case.

But Stewart was among those often spent more time sprawled ont on the carpeted steps than tuning into the evening's selection, and many families left their perches almost as quickly as they came.

But while attention lapsed and the crowd fell far short of the 30,000 shoppers who heard the entire Chicago Symphony Orchestra play in 1974, bass musician Frank Miller was pleasantly surprised at the standing ovation and autograph seekers.

Miller said, "You've got to realize that playing Beethoven just won't have the same effect that you'd get with Harry James pounding out jazz."

"We're pleased and surprised that people were as attentive as they were tonight."

Vanned pair foil gas staton heist

When a Wheeling man saw only one employe in an empty gas station in Ivanhoe in Lake County late Thursday, he and another man apparently decided they could pull off an easy robbery.

They forgot to look beyond the station.

Jack D.Eiler and Chris Miller of Mundelein told police they saw the robbers from their van about 100 feet west of the Fidel Ranch Highland Gas Station at the intersection of Ill. Routes 83, 60, and 176...

Police said Douglas J. Shedd, 29, of 573 S. Milwaukee Ave., Wheeling, and Michael Piat, 21, of Waukegan, escaped with $42 from the station. But they didn't get very far.

Eiler chased them in the van east on Rte. 83 as Miller telephoned police from a liquor store next to the gas station. Moments later Eiler also telephoned police and gave them a description of the getaway car and its license plate number.

From there it took Lincolnshire and Cook County police only 15 minutes to capture Shedd and Piat on Rte. 83 near the Lake-Cook County line.

They were charged with robbery. A court date and hearing were pending on Friday, police said.

Drugs in Presley's body not cause of death: report

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (UPI) — Elvis Presley took at least eight drugs before his sudden death two months ago, but they did not contribute to the heart attack that killed him, a county medical examiner said Friday.

Dr. Jerry Francisco, who conducted the autopsy following the singer's death Aug. 16, discounted published reports that Presley's alleged abuse of prescription drugs had caused his death at the age of 42.

"It was a natural death," the medical examiner said. "The cause of death has been ascribed to hypertensive heart disease with coronary artery heart disease as a contributing factor."

FRANCISCO DID confirm that eight prescription drugs were found in Presley's body, four of them in "significant amounts." The medical examiner said, however, that none of them separately or collectively could have caused death.

"Had these drugs not been there, he would have died at the time he died, in the manner he died," he said.

The drugs found in the greater amounts included three forms of sedatives and codeine, that was prescribed for pain. The other drugs included Demoral and Valium. Francisco said the drugs may have been taken as long as seven days prior to his death.

Dr. George Nichopoulas, Presley's personal friend and physician, had said earlier that the singer was given medication for hypertension, sinus and an enlarged colon.

PRESLEY, WHOSE heart was found to be 50 per cent larger than that of an average person's, had been dead at least two hours when he was found at 2 p.m., lying in the bathroom of his Memphis mansion, Francisco said. He said the death may have come as early as 8 a.m.

Francisco's report Friday merely backed up his earlier diagnosis of death from heart failure, but the medical examiner said he decided to release further details because of "the considerable questions in many people's minds."

The medical examiner, who also conducted the autopsy on Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. following his murder in Memphis in 1967, said more toxicology work was done in Presley's case than any other he has handled — and it was done because of persistent rumors about drug abuse. Five laboratories, three pathologists and three toxicologists reviewed the autopsy report.

Francisco said all the pathologists and two of the toxicologists agreed that there was no evidence of medication which might have made any "significant contribution" to the death of Presley. The third toxicologist noted that the medications were in the therapeutic range and individually did not constitute an overdose.

All of the medications found in tissue samples were prescription drugs, the medical examiner said, and an extensive search for illegal drugs turned up no trace.

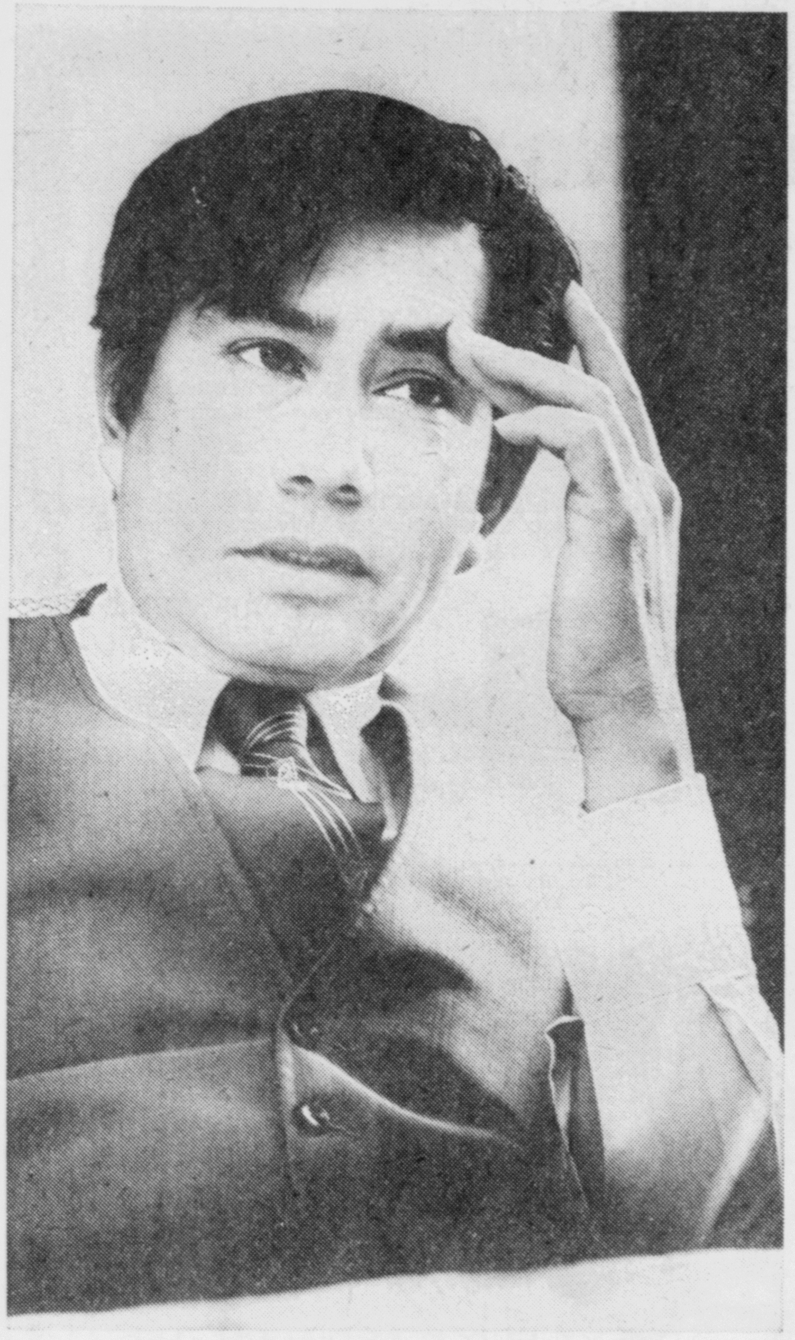
For migrants, 'settling out' is the goal



Bob Munoz

Bob Munoz used to want to be a pharmacist.

When he was in junior high school, he worked part time in a drug store, cleaning windows and stacking supplies. And occasionally, he helped mix some chemicals. The druggist even offered to get him a scholarship for college.

But Munoz always knew that he had little chance of becoming a pharmacist.

HIS PARENTS were migrant workers.

And that meant that he would become one, too.

He grew up in Texas, and his father died when he was 2. His mother was illiterate so "she had no choice but to put us to work."

There were seven children in the family. They seldom had new clothes. Most of the time, they lived in a small house. It had no running water, no toilets, no appliances, but it did have two rooms: a kitchen and a side room where all eight family members slept.

THEY WORKED the fields from April throuth November each year, seven-days-a-week if the weather was good, and finally, the days off from school caught up with Munoz. He had to struggle to keep up, and in the eleventh grade, he dropped out.

For years, he traveled the country in the family car, making $50 to $70 a week if he was lucky and worrying only about survival.

That is one of the toughest things about being a migrant, he says, it takes away your dreams.

"When you're a migrant," he says, "you don't have any objectives at all, no goals in life even as to where you're going to be next month."

BUT MUNOZ has "settled out."

He is 36 and he owns a house in Streamwood and he has a wife and five children of his own now.

He studied to obtain a high school diploma and he has attended classes at the University of Wisconsin and he is studying at DePaul University for a bachelor's degree in public administration.

John Lampinen

Byline report

He works behind a desk in his own private office in the Loop as the executive director of the Illinois Migrant Council, a nonprofit organibation that offers programs for the estimated 32,000 migrants who come through the state eaeh year.

HE HAS COME a long way. The trip, he says, started in 1959.

That year, Munoz recalls, he and some friends were offered a contract that promised employment through October working the sugar beet fields in Idaho.

They were given $10 each for transportation, and drove to Idaho only to find there had been a snow fall and that the crops had to be replanted. There was no work and they had to borrow money from the growers for food.

The three families lived in a small house, with the men sleeping in a covered wagon, chopping wood to keep warm. When the crops were finally ready, they ended up with two weeks of work before heading south to Utah trying to get back to Texas.

THEY STOPPED at every town on the way, asking if there was work, sleeping in chicken coops and occasionally picking up a day's labor.

When he finally got back to Texas, a friend suggested that there was work in Illinois, and it was there Munoz says, that he saw Latinos working permanent factory jobs.

"I said, 'Somebody's making it. Maybe I can too,' " he recalls.

Munoz took a job with Klehm's Nursery in Arlington Heights. It did not pay a lot, he says, but it was a guaranteed pay.

"I WANTED TO have something to own, a car, and to be warm and to have something and provide for the family," he recalls. "There was more security. I knew that I had a job as long as the nursery was in operation."

In 1968, he was offered a job as an outreach worker for the council. He progressed from that to a regional director and eventually to being the council's executive director.

Now, he lobbies for changes in state regulations on migrant housing and living conditions and he helps others like him settle out and he helps provide education, health and nutrition programs for migrants.

The work is satisfying, and he does not mind not being a pharmacist.

But he remembers that boyhood dream.

"AS A MIGRANT," he remembers, "you constantly see poor living conditions. You constantly see your children cold, not being able to talke a bath when they want to take a bath.

"One has to see those things to realize you can't do that with your kids."

His children range in age from 6 to 13. Already, Munoz plans for their educations. Already, he asks them what college they would like to attend. Already, he asks them what they would like to be.

He wants their dreams to have a chance.

Elrod will name Moore successor on Monday

RICHARD ELROD

Cook County Sheriff Richarl J. Elrod will hold a news conference Monday to announce a successor for Acting Corrections Director Winston E. Moore.

Elrod said Friday Moore's "services will be terminated" effective Monday. He declined to say who will replace the controversial acting director, but said he will hold a news conference on the matter at 10 a.m. Monday in the Daley Civic Center, Chicago.

The new director is expected to be sheriff's police Capt. Phillip Hardiman.

MOORE HAS BEEN on inactive status since February when he was indicted on two separate charges involving brutality against county jail inmates.

Moore, 46, was acquitted of both charges, the most recent acquittal coming Wednesday when Criminal Court Judge James M. Bailey dismissed charges against Moore and three other jail officials.

In June, Judge Bailey also acquitted Moore and five other corrections department employes accused of beating two handcuffed prisoners.

Elrod said Friday that Moore's contract had expired Sept. 1, 1976, although he had been serving at Elrod's designation as acting director until a successor was appointed.

Elrod said Moore was not being "fired.

"His services have been terminated," he said.

Elrod and Moore have long been at odds and the sheriff, whose department oversees the corrections bureau, has said numerous times in the past that Moore would not be retained.

Moore could not be reached for comment Friday.

'Son of Sam' competent to stand trial, judge rules

NEW YORK (UPI) — David Berkowitz was found mentally competent Friday to stand trial for the last of the six "Son of Sam" murders, and his lawyer said he would raise a defense of innocent by reason of insanity.

"Everyone agrees he understands the charges against him," Brooklyn Supreme Court Justice John Starkey ruled after a day and a half of hearings.

"Is he oriented in time and place? The answer is yes. Has he established a working relationship with his attorney. Again, yes. Therefore I find we are able to proceed."

STARKEY ASKED prosecuting and defense attorneys to appear in court Nov. 2 for motions but did not set an official trial date. Although Berkowitz can be moved to another detention facility — Riker's Island or the Brooklyn House of Dentention — a spokesman for the State Corrections Dept. said he will remain for the time being at the psychiatric ward of King's County Hospital.

After the hearing, defense attorney Ira Jultak said he was convinced the ruling was "an eminently fair decision" and said Berkowitz was "perfectly satisfied" with the ruling.

Jultak raised the possibility that despite Berkowitz' wishes to be put away, he would plead his client innocent by reason of insanity. "There's a point at which you must consider the defendant's wishes, and then there's a point when you must override them," Jultak said.

The hearings had many sensational moments, including several pleas by Berkowitz that the judge "lock me up and throw away the key" so he could not kill again, and the playing of a 70-minute tape recording in which the defendant said he was driven to the murders "by howling demons."

STARKEY'S decision overruled Schwartz, who had concluded the 24-year-old postal worker was "paranoid" and mentally unfit to stand trial or participate in his own defense.

"Looking at him and observing him, it was the only conclusion I could come to," Starkey said after the hearing. "The possibility entered my mind that his actions were caused by rejection by girls. That if he can't have them, he'll do something else."

Asked if he believed Berkowitz's claims that he was driven to murder by demons, Starkey said, "I don't know if it's delusion, hallucination, or if it's contrived in his mind."

Starkey's decision applies only to the last of the six nighttime ambush murders committed by "Son of Sam" during a year-long reign of terror in the city's lovers' lanes. Berkowitz faces murder charges — and, presumably, other competency hearings — in the Bronx and Queens as well.

who urged Hannan to surrender. Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner A. Reginald Eaves credited the "very firm statement" from Stewart with convincing Hannan to give up his passenger hostages.

Police in Mobile, Ala., where Stewart was arrested in 1973 while carrying a concealed weapon, said Stewart told investigators Hannan was his homosexual lover, but Hannan's brother, Richard, denied this. He said his brother was not a homosexual, but that Stewart was a "known homosexual."

COCHRAN SAID communications between the tower and the hijacked jet were being monitored by psychological specialists in Washington and that FBI agents immediately prepared a psychological profile of Hannan.

He said psychological data gathered by the FBI indicated Hannan "couldn't stand to see something suffer. He couldn't stand to see a dog get hit by a car."

He said it was "several remarks he made, like not being afraid to die" that led the FBI to believe Hannan might take his own life. "That was the distinct possibility," Cochran said.

"The fact that he didn't gas the plane up upon landing showed he didn't intend to take off," he said. "We asked him, 'what are you going to do if Mike goes with you?' and he had no answer."

COCHRAN SAID getting Hannan to move off a self-imposed 5 p.m. deadline was a turning point in the talks. "After a person wavers once, he'll waver again.

"We kept probing him to find something he would relate to. The key turning point was when he related extremely well to the defense attorney," said Cochran. "This is the one we zeroed in on very strongly."

Hannan's statement that "I need an honorable way out" just prior to the release of the stewardesses "was a key phrase to us. We thought he was looking for a way out to save face," said Cochran.

Cochran said the FBI delayed in letting Stewart talk with the hijacker to allow talks with Stewart "to assure he would enhance our position rather than fortifying Mike."

He said Hannan was "calm through the whole thing. There were no highs and lows. The deadline was something we had to look at and we talked him down . . . It never got to a critical stage as far as the safety of the hostages."

Authorities in Grand Island said Hannan experienced "distinct personality changes" following a tour of duty in Vietnam.

Arms pact in few weeks: Carter

DES MOINES, Iowa (UPI) — President Carter Friday night said the United States and the Soviet Union will reach an accord on a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty "within a few weeks."

In an unexpected move during his address to the Iowa Democratic Party Jefferson-Jackson Day Dinner, Carter said "within a few weeks we will have a SALT agreement that will be the pride of this country."

Carter's announcement came as a small group of anti-neutron bomb protestors — located about 50 feet away from the Veterans Auditorium podium — began to chant. He continued to speak without acknowledging the repeated chants of "Stop the neutron bomb!"

Carter previously had said there was substantial agreement between the two superpowers but had cautioned that a final pact was not near at hand.

The existing SALT I expired this month but the two nations decided to continue honoring the spirit of the agreement while the negotiations continued.

The President said he will strive to prevent other countries from being added to "the horrible club that we started" in introducing the world to the age of nuclear weapons.

Carter made two stops — at Detroit and Des Moines — on the first day of a three-day tour of the Midwest and West devoted to taking his problems to the people and listening to theirs. He planned to spend the night as a guest in an Iowa farm home outside of Des Moines.

In Detroit, the president fielded questions on urban problems. He was challenged to act as "the hope of the poor people" and responded "the nation will feel the benefits of what we've done in the next few months."

BUT CARTER'S round table discussion on urban living problems with 13 persons from midwestern states was not altogether a success.

Rep. John Conyers, a black Democratic congressman from Detroit who has criticized Carter on racial issues, said the meeting had almost no value.

"When are we going to stop this bullshit?" Conyers said after the meeting. "It's about time someone levels with the people. You can't meet in a city like this and say things are getting better."

Romelia M. Carter, a Youngstown, Ohio, youth agency director, complained that when she asked the President what programs he was planning, "all he said was he was planning something."

"I'm not exactly dancing a jig over that," she said.

One of the participants in the forum discussion with Carter, Emma Monina, a mother of 10 who works with migrant workers, spoke emotionally about the hardships and obstacles in trying to get a job.

Commuter starts safer Friday

by KEN VANDERBEEK

Rosie Karmik allowed herself an extra 10 minutes Friday morning to buy a ticket and catch the 7:21 train from Palatine to Chicago.

And it's no wonder...

Thursday morning she had rushed and fallen onto the tracks before an oncoming train.

IF IT HADN'T been for Gerry Pape, 24, of 935 Countryside Dr., Palatine, she might not have lived to tell her story.

"All I remember was falling flat on my face and seeing the train bear down on me," said Miss Karmik, 19, of 258 Russet Way, Palatine. "I was paralyzed from fright and I couldn't get up."

But Pape grabbed her arm and pulled her off the tracks. She fell on top of him as the Chicago & North Western Ry. commuter train sped by.

"I got up but I was so scared, never thanked Mr. Pape," she said. She did not identify herself to him until her mother saw the story in Friday's Daily Herald. "I talked with him tonight," she said.

Miss Karmik said she did not feel the full impact of the incident until Friday.

"THE SOUND OF the train was enough to frighten me today," she said. "And that platform — I felt like I was walking on ice."

Miss Karmik began work Monday as a receptionist for the Fellinger Corp., a life insurance company.

"People at work have been kidding me that I should take out an insurance policy for my own good," she said. "Maybe they're right."

Skynyrd airplane was 'rundown'

GILLSBURG, Miss. (UPI) — A chartered plane that crashed in Mississippi killing key members of the popular Lynyrd Skynyrd rock band was in rundown condition and several members of the band were going to vote on whether to continue flying in it, a member of the entourage said Friday.

Six persons, including lead singer and band leader Ronnie Van Zant, 28, were killed when the craft, a propeller-driven Convair 240, reportedly ran out of gas and plowed nose first into a thickly wooded area 200 yards from an open field where the pilot apparently hoped to set it down.

Twenty others aboard were injured, several critically.

VAN ZANT, Cassie Gaines and her brother, Steve, were among the victims. Others who died included Dean Kilpatrick, a member of the entourage; the pilot, Walter McCrearey, and co-pilot, John Grey, both of Dallas.

Redd won't apologize to Fawcetts

• Comedian Redd Foxx says he'll quit before he apologizes to the parents of Farrah Fawcett-Majors who threaten to sue him for $2 million for satirizing them on his ABC-TV show. Foxx recently appeared in a skit as the actress's father, wearing a Farrah styled wig, as did a dog and a parrot. The Fawcetts contend that it held them up to ridicule. Foxx says he'll cancel his show before he apologizes and says he doesn't care if the network sues him for breach of contract.

• Singer Marvin Gaye, fined $765 for refusing twice to give a deposition, was ordered again Friday to give sworn testimony in a lawsuit by five former employes. A Los Angeles court judge said he wouldn't tolerate a third refusal and ordered the singer to return to Los Angeles within three weeks to respond to the suit by five musicians who say the singer failed to pay them. Gaye is in Jamaica, his lawyer said.

• The hometown of the Beatles, Liverpool, has decided that the group is not worthy enough to be formally remembered. The city's General Purposes Committee this week rejected by a vote of 10-8, plans to erect a statue in the honor of the "fab four" — John Lennon, Paul McCartney, George Harrison and Ringo Starr — who emerged from obscurity to imprint the "Mersey sound" on pop music worldwide in the 1960s. "They aren't worthy of a place in our history," said councilor Rod Stoddart, chairman of the committee that was asked to authorize the lifesize statue. "They made a lot of money and we haven't seen them since they departed from the scene," he said.

Firefighters testify at maid arson trial

Three firefighters and two paramedics described Friday finding 22 elderly persons dead or dying in the chapel of the Wincrest Nursing and Rest Home Jan. 30, 1976. The firefighters and paramedics testified during the murder and arson trial of Denise Watson, 22, a maid at the nursing home. The blaze claimed the lives of a total of 23 residents of the nursing home. Most died from the smoke. "Dark brown, almost black," smoke filled the nursing home, one firefighter testified. Another testified he saw Miss Watson run through the chapel hallway and stariwell door. She collapsed in his arms, he said, and was treated at a hospital for smoke inhalation.

New chain letter scheme out

A new "bank by mail" chain letter pyramid game, described by police as being a scheme "so pitifully simple it's clever," has begun to circulate around the city, police said Friday. The new type of chain letter was discovered by police after a would-be victim of the scheme sent a copy of his letter to one of several financial institutions listed in the correspondence. The letter, signed "Robert S.," lists six account numbers at various Chicago banks and savings and loan associations. It states that in order to get $230,000, the letter holder must deposit money in one of several bank accounts. Then, to continue the chain, he must mail copies of the letter to six friends, cross out the account number at the top of the list and add his name to the bottom.

Seek acquittal in bid rig trial

Attorneys for construction company owners Thomas J. Bowler and George B. Krug Sr. and eight firms charged with rigging bids in a $45.7 million Stevenson Expressway resurfacing project Friday said the prosecution's arguments are "illogical." The defense lawyers asked U.S. District Court Judge Joel M. Flaum for a directed verdict of acquittal. Flaum said he would rule Monday. One lawyer said the assertion of star government witness Ernest A. Bederman, president of the defunct Arcole Midwest Co. that he joined Bowler and Krug and three other companies in the scheme is "just pure fiction." He said the contractors met and discussed the project bidding, but said there was no conspiracy.

Allstate revises auto ratings

The Allstate Insurance Co. Friday revised its rating of makes and models of cars, lowering insurance rates for some cars and raising them for others. The change is an adjustment in Allstate's policy, announced last year, of considering damage, repair cost and theft records of individual makes in calculating rates. The plan applies only to 1976 and newer cars but is not used in all states. Seven models were shifted into the low-loss group for the first time. They are Ford's LTD and Country Squire; American Motors' Matador and Hornet; Chrysler's Dodge Coronet and Monaco, and General Motors' Pontiac Ventura. Moved into the high-loss group were the Volkswagen Sirocco; Buick Opel; all Audi models; BMW'S 202, 3.0 3201 and 5301; Mazda's RX4, GLC and Cosmo; Renault's 15 and 17; Saab 99; Chevrolet Camaro; Dodge Charger; and all Jaguars, Mercedes-Benzes and Peugots.

Fines tapped for southern district

President Carter Friday announced his intention to nominate Gerald D. Fines, former Justice Dept. attorney, to be U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois for the term of four years. A graduate of the University of Kentucky School of law, Fines has served as court appointed U.S. attorney for the Southern District of Illinois since last February. Previously he was an assistant U.S. attorney in that office.

Gay candidate for House seat

Gary Nepon, 28, a homosexual has announced his plans to run for an Illinois House seat. Nepon, a sales representative, is the first openly homosexual candidate for major political office in the Chicago area. "I am gay but I will not be a single-issue candidate," Nepon said Thursday. "I have not been a gay activist. I don't believe in confrontation." Nepon will run in the 13th District, currently represented by Democrats James Houlihan and Daniel P. O'Brien and Republican Elroy Sandquist Jr.

Mann resigns to accept post in Missouri

William J. Mann, Harper College vice president of administrative services, resigned Friday to become Vice-Chancellor of Administration of the Metropolitan Community Colleges of Kansas City, Mo.

Mann, who is one of three vice presidents reporting directly to Harper Pres. Robert E. Lahti, said he leaves the college "with mixed emotions."

Mann has been at Harper for 10 years, since it was an institution housed in mobile trailers in Elk Grove Village and had about 1,000 students. The college now has a permanent campus in Palatine and is attended by about 20,000 students.

A recent audit of Harper's management by Tadlock Associates Inc. stated that the tremendous growth of Harper in the past decade required strong administrative decision-making, but that the decision-making power is now perceived by others in the college as being too concentrated in the hands of Lahti, Mann and two other vice presidents, Geurin A. Fischer and John R. Birkholz.

Mann will assume his duties in Missouri Jan. 1.

22 residents back another school at Miner: survey

by SHERYL JEDLINSKI

Renting Miner Junior High School to another school district or a social service agency would be a welcome arrangement to residents living near the school at 1101 E. Miner St., Arlington Heights

A random survey of 22 Miner area residents Friday showed strong support for having Aptakisic Dist. 102 in Vernon Township rent 10 to 18 classrooms in the school after it closes in June because of declining enrollment.

The proposed arrangement also meets with the approval of several Dist. 102 residents in Buffalo Grove who told The Daily Herald they see it as the only workable solution to expected overcrowding in their district's one school.

THE DIST. 25 Board of Education Thursday gave Supt. Donald Strong the go-ahead to negotiate with Dist. 102 officials for the rental of Miner beginning in September.

With its single school on Weiland Road already at capacity and enrollment expected to more than triple in the next three to four years, Dist. 102 has tentative plans to bus about 150 junior high students to a school in another town next year. The only alternative would be putting students on double shifts, Supt. Harold Koggendorf said.

"I don't care for my daughter being taken out of the area, but I don't think she'd get as good an education with double shifts," said Mryna Finkelberg, 373 Dogwood Ter., Buffalo Grove. "So, as long as she'd still go to school with kids from this area, I guess I wouldn't object to the busing."

Dist. 102 encompasses a small, partially developed portion of Buffalo Grove on the Vernon Township-Wheeling Township border.

Residents in the Miner area said they wouldn't object to the busing either.

"I'm all in favor of busing kids in from another area," said Valerie Callas, 1115 E Campbell. "They shouldn't be building more schools a few miles away when we have schools available here."

EVEN THOUGH a rental arrangement worked out with Dist. 102 probably would be only short term, it would at least give Dist. 25 a chance to search out a long term occupant for Miner who would be more appropriate than Roosevelt University, said Judy Johnsen, 1111 E. Campbell St.

The Chicago-based university had expressed an interest in leasing Miner as a branch campus, but withdrew from rental negotiations with Dist. 25 because of opposition mounted by Miner area residents who feared the university would cause neighborhood traffic and safety problems.

"I still think Roosevelt would be an asset to the village and hope they can locate at North School," Maureen Schaffhausen, 213 N. Dryden, said.

Closed in June 1976, North School at 410 N. Arlington Heights Rd. is leased to the Northwest Opportunity Center, a social service agency.

Room at Thomas for Miner students

All Miner Junior High School students can easily be accommodated at Thomas Junior High School when Miner is closed in June, Arlington Heights Dist. 25 officials say.

Attendance boundary changes proposed by administrators for the 1978-79 school year call for all Miner students to attend Thomas, 303 E. Thomas, and have all but about 40 of the Thomas students stay where they are.

The 40 Thomas students who would be moved live south of Northwest Highway in the Westgate School area and should logically go to South Junior High School, 314 S. Highland Ave., Supt. Donald Strong told the Dist. 25 Board of Education Thursday.

MINER WILL close in June because of declining enrollment.

No boundary changes would be necessary in the Rand Junior High School attendance area at the north end of the district, he said.

The board will not vote on the recommended boundary modifications until its Nov. 10 meeting, but Board Pres. Nicholas Raino said he had never seen "a more simple solution."

With the addition of the Miner students, Thomas' enrollment for the 1978-79 school year is expected to be 971, Strong said. The following year it should be down to 889 and by 1981-82, Thomas' enrollment probably will be about 840, he said.

THE IDEAL enrollment for most efficient operation of educational programs at Thomas is between 900 and 1,000 students, Strong said, but the school housed between 1,100 and 1,200 when Dist. 25 enrollment was at its peak in the late sixties.

Enrollment at Rand is expected to range from 736 students in 1978-79 to 629 students in 1981-82. Administration projections show South dropping from an enrollment of 721 students next year to 663 students in 1981-82.

"With these numbers we can run solid programs in all three schools at least for a realistic period of time," Strong said.

Additionally, the proposed boundary changes would mean that no children have to cross the Chicago and North Western Ry. tracks to get to school, he said.

All students living south of Northwest Highway would attend South.

Dist. 25 refuses busing to Park Manor children

Saying it is not hazardous for students to walk through the Scarsdale subdivision without the aid of sidewalks to get to South Junior High School, officials in Arlington Heights Dist. 25 will not provide free busing for the youngsters.

Parents in the Park Manor subdivision, just north of Central Road and east of Arlington Heights Road, requested the free busing recently because they believe the mile or so route to the school, 314 S. Highland Ave., is hazardous — so hazardous that they now pay $45 a year to have their children transported.

Dist. 25 policy follows Illinois law that students living more than 1½ miles from school will receive free transportation. Students living less than the 1½-mile limit also can receive free busing if their route to school goes through an area "with no sidewalks and hazardous conditions," said James Monroe, director of buildings and grounds.

"THE STATISTICS and facts we have before us give us no reason to feel that the area is a dangerous one," Nicholas Raino, board of education president, told the parents Thursday night.

Accident data collected by Dist. 25 administrators show that the Park Manor and Scarsdale areas had no accidents involving cars and pedestrians for the last three years. The village as a whole had 51 such accidents during the period.

The area had eight accidents involving cars and bicycles in the three-year period, while the village had 127, administrators said.

Major intersections and not the absence of sidewalks is what most determines the volume of accidents, they concluded.

If Dist. 25 were to provide free busing for all students who must walk to school without the aid of sidewalks, it would cost an additional $121,000 and would involve more than 1,100 more students, administrators said.

"The board is not unsympathetic to your problem, but we cannot be in a position where this amount of money is spent when it is not proven to be a hazardous situation," board member Edith Jolly told the Park Manor parents.

Luther Village hearing delayed

A zoning board hearing on plans for the controversial Luther Village will be continued at the request of attorneys for the Lutheran Home and Service for the Aged, Arlington Heights.

William J. Moore said Thursday he has asked that the hearing scheduled for Monday before the village zoning board of appeals be postponed for at least two months.

"I don't think the plan is in condition to proceed yet. I think we need to take a new look at it," Moore said.

The retirement village is proposed for 53 acres north of the Lutheran Home, 800 W. Oakton St.

The issue became highly controversial last spring when residents objected to the density of the project and the five-story apartment buildings included in the plans.

The plans approved by the village plan commission last January call for 250 one-story townhouses and 500 units of two-to five-story apartment buildings.

Moore said he has recommended "sweeping changes" to the plans, which will be discussed Monday afternoon by the board of directors for the Lutheran Home and Service for the Aged.

price and the savings to the customer. However, after The Daily Herald reported Sept. 14 that the sale was being investigated, those price tags were removed, Mulack said.

THE LAWSUITS also will ask that Burny and Goodman be prohibited from conducting any future "going out of business" sales and that all state and local licenses authorizing them to conduct business in Illinois be revoked, Mulack said.

"We're also asking for a court order permitting any person who has suffered damages in connection with this sale to submit proof to the court of the damages," Mulack said.

"The purpose here by seeking $50,000 penalties is to obtain from them part of the wrongfully gained profits as a result of their fraudulent acts," Mulack said.

Burny listed the store as having an inventory worth $185,000 when he acquired a "going out of business" sale permit from the Village of Arlington Heights in August.

FULL-SCALE investigations into sales similar to the Schneller Furniture Company's sale are rare, Mulack said.

"Before this year, we would wait until there was a consumer complaint and then conduct a hearing two or three months later. By that time, records can be lost or destroyed," Mulack said.

"On this case we moved very quickly once we were tipped by your people. We used our own investigators to establish our factual basis before the businessman was aware we were looking into his sale," he said.

Persons who feel they may have suffered damages in the Schneller Furniture Co. sale may call the attorney general's office, 793-3580.

Correction

A story in The Daily Herald Friday incorrectly identified John Peters, owner of a house at 104 N. Pine St. that has several building and housing violations filed against it, as also owning the real estate office next door.

The real estate office, Century 21 Peters & Fulk Realtors, is owned by Albert C. Peters, John Peter's father, and Richadr D. Falk.

Awareness night set

A social awareness night is scheduled from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. today at Congregational United Church of Christ, 1001 W. Kirchoff Rd., Arlington Heights.

There will be three separate discussion groups for residents including the need for visitation of shut-ins within the village, the impact of a changing community on the church within the inner city and unemployment in the Chicago area.

For additional information, call 439-4336.

ROYALLY ROBED Jeff Brockway and Susan Parlee looked their parts Friday when they were crowned king and queen of Arlington High School's homecoming. They will reign at the homecoming dance tonight at Grace Gym.

Bus service may begin by Nov.7

Commuter bus service could start as early as Nov. 7 in Rolling Meadows and south Arlington Heights if the Regional Transportation Authority approves a contract with the low bidder for the project.

Commuter Bus Systems, Lombard, with an annual bid of $42,960, will get the contract if the company meets all RTA specifications.

Bids are being examined by RTA staff and will be presented to the RTA board for approval Nov. 3.

COMMUTER BUS Systems operates commuter shuttle services for the RTA in five other communities, including Elmhurst, Naperville, Glendale Heights, Glen Ellyn and Bloomingdale. It also carries about 400 persons a day to the Arlington Heights train station from the Stonebridge Apartments and the Twelve Oaks Apartments in Arlington Heights.

The routes to be put in service by the RTA extend west of Ill. Rte. 53 to Vermont Street in Rolling Meadows, as far south as Algonquin Road and White Oak Street in Arlington Heights and as far east as Arlington Heights Road.

The fare will be 30 cents.

THE ROLLING Meadows route will go to the Arlington Park railroad station and will meet morning trains leaving at 6:37, 7:13, 7:56 and 8:34. The bus will meet arriving evenings trains at 5:48, 6:20 and 7:11 p.m.

The southern Arlington Heights route will go to the downtown Arlington Heights station and will meet morning trains leaving at 6:42, 7:19, 8:01 and 8:38. In the evening the bus will meet the trains arriving at 5:23, 5:56, 6:25 and 7:01.

Carter seeks OK of arms for Korea

President Carter formally asked Congress Friday to approve the transfer of $800 million in military equipment free of charge to South Korea. The equipment is to offset deficiences as the United States withdraws its ground troops from Korea over the next five years. In a letter to House Speaker Thomas O'Neill and Senate Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd, Carter proposed the transfer be at "no cost" to the Korean government. Most of the equipment is with the U.S. Army and Air Force in Korea and includes tanks, antitank missiles, helicopters, air defense, artillery, ground surveillance equipment, radar, tactical support ammunition and combat engineering equipment. The Army's M-60 tanks will be removed from Korea, said Michael Armacost of the National Security Affairs staff. A fleet of M-48 tanks which the Koreans have will be reinforced, he said.

$40 billion energy bill advances

Adopting a course exactly the opposite of President Carter's energy plan, the Senate Finance Committee gave its final approval Friday to legislation providing $40 billion over eight years in tax credits and incentives for energy conservation and production. The committee cleared the way for action next Tuesday on the Senate floor, where the proposal will run into opposition from liberals including Senators Henry Jackson, D-Wash., Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, and James Abourezk, D-S.D. The final vote to report the bill, which was tentatively approved last week, was 13-5. Voting against the bill were two Democrats Senators Harry Byrd, Va., and Floyd Haskell, Colo. — and three Republicans — Bob Dole, Kan., William Roth, Del., and Paul Laxalt, Nev.

If the Senate goes along with the plan advanced by Finance Chairman Russell Long, D-La., the final bill will not look like either the Finance Committee bill or the one passed earlier by the House which was close to Carter's request.

USDA aide resigns post

Assistant Agriculture Sec. Robert Meyer submitted his resignation to President Carter Friday rather than stop his lobbying efforts to keep federal water flowing to farmers in California's Imperial Valley. The White House said Carter was expected to accept the resignation Monday. Press Secretary Jody Powell said the resignation had not been requested. Agriculture Dept. sources said Meyer had been thinking of resigning since late September when questions were raised about his lobbying activities to change a law adversely affecting Imperial Valley farmers. Meyer and his family own more than 2,000 acres in the area, a former desert region in Southern California. At issue was a 1902 federal law, recently upheld by the court, which limited federal water for irrigation to farms of less than 160 acres.

500 Viet refugees to enter U.S.

About 500 of the estimated 850 Vietnamese refugees living in Japan will soon be admitted to the United States, Japanese and U.S. officials said Friday. The U.S. Embassy in Tokyo confirmed a report from sources in the Japanese Foreign Ministry that the Vietnamese will enter the United States under an Aug. 12 decision by Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell to take in an additional 15,000 refugees. About 8,000 of these will be Vietnamese who left their country overland by way of Laos and are now housed in refugee camps in Thailand. The other 7,000 will be Vietnamese "boat people," who have fled the Saigon area in fishing vessels after the collapse of the American-backed government of South Vietnam in 1975.

Polanski probation hearing delayed

A judge Friday recessed until Monday a hearing on whether Roman Polanski violated his special probation from a sex crime sentence by traveling to Munich as a "tourist" because he was in Tahiti stranded by an airline strike. His attorney, Douglas Dalton, explained to Superior Court Judge Laurence J. Rittenband that Polanski had been scheduled to arrive in Los Angeles Thursday in time for the special hearing, but his flight was canceled because of a one-day airline strike. The judge agreed to recess the hearing until Monday so the filmmaker could answer questions about a controversial newspaper photograph showing him in a Munich beer hall during the Oktoberfest with a caption that he was there as "a tourist and just wants to relax. Polanski, 44, pleaded guilty Aug. 8 to illegal sexual intercourse with a 13-year-old girl. Rape and drug charges were dropped.

U.S. cites areas blocking SALT

Carter administration officials said Friday three major problems remain before the United States and the Soviet Union can agree on a new Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty. The three major questions still left unsettled were:

- How to limit accuracy and development of the new, large Soviet missiles, such as the SS-18, so as to give the United States some assurance they would not be used in a sneak attack that would wipe out U.S. land-based missiles in their siloes.
- How to regulate the long-distance cruise missiles. Cruise missiles are pilotless jets which can carry small nuclear warheads over great distance with exceptional accuracy.
- The actual numbers involved in the overall ceiling of weapons. Congressional sources said the negotiators are now discussing a total for each side ranging between 2,160 and 2,250. The bargaining is being carried on at Geneva, by a standing committee of U.S. and Soviet arms negotiators.

U.N. extends Sinai peace force

The United Nations Security Council Friday voted to extend for one year the 4,300-man U.N. peacekeeping force in the Sinai Peninsula, but warned the troops should not become a "permanent crutch" in the Middle East. The Council took just 10 minutes to vote 13-0 to extend the mandate beyond its scheduled expiration Monday. China and Libya did not vote. Approval of the peacekeeping force, stretching 100 miles from the Mediterranean to the Gulf of Suez between Egypt and Israel, came as no surprise but several countries indicated time may be running out on its usefulness. It "cannot be used as a permanent crutch" to maintain the present state of "no peace, no war" in the region, said British U.N. Counselor Robin A. C. Ryatt. Soviet Ambassador Oleg Troyanovsky also warned that indefinite reliance on the troops might result in a "freezing" of the uneasy balance.

Pilots postpone world strike

A group of U.S. and foreign airline pilots Friday postponed a threatened worldwide strike after receiving assurances the United Nations will hold an urgent debate on ways to curb air piracy. But Capt. Derry Pearce, president of the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations, warned the pilots would still strike if the U.N. General Assembly fails to take "firm action" against hijackings. Pearce met with U.N. Sec. Gen. Kurt Waldheim and later said he was "satisfied with the very sincere assurances given to me." "We are postponing the strike while we see how the General Assembly follows up on the assurances given to us by Mr. Waldheim. We are not canceling it," he said. Pearce said the secretary general promised to push the General Assembly to take up the hijacking issue in its current session, perhaps as early as next week.

PART OF ITS BEAUTY IS THE ENERGY IT SAVES.

The Glassfyre® fireplace screen is beautiful in two ways.

It's beautiful because you can close the doors of a Glassfyre before the fire dies out. That saves you a lot of house heat which would otherwise be drawn out the chimney.

And when there is no fire in the hearth, the Glassfyre is beautiful just because it's beautiful.

HOOVER THE JAGUAR meets Jimmy Lackowski, Robbie Urquhart and Richie Brother (L-R), three of 800 students from Hoover School in Schaumburg who adopted him Friday at Brookfield Zoo. An individual or group can "adopt" an animal and name it by paying for its food for a year. Hoover is held by keeper Craig Kitchen.

Hoover is school with a jaguar's meow for kids

BY HOLLY HANSON

Hoover the jaguar is one feline who has gotten off to a fast start in life.

At the tender age of 10 weeks, Hoover lives in a private cage at Brookfield Zoo, has a relationship with an older woman (a five-month-old jaguar from the cage next door) and Friday acquired about 800 adoptive parents: the students at Hoover School in Schaumburg.

Hoover will be cared for through a donation the students made to Brookfield's Adopt-A-Pet program. The $510.69 they raised from a bake sale and donations is enough to feed the animal for one year, but students want to raise money each year so the adoption can be a continuing project, teacher Judy Strohmeyer said.

THE JAGUAR was chosen for adoption by a student vote and named for the school at 315 N. Springinsguth Rd. The amount of money needed to feed an animal for a year depends on how much it eats.

Hoover weighs about 20 pounds and is the size of a kitten, Ms. Strohmeyer said. When Hoover grows up, he'll be seven to eight feet in length and weigh about 400 pounds, she said.

He has bristly black fur with black spots, she said, an unusual combination for the jaguar, which is the fastest land animal in North America.

Both jaguars live in the zoo building that houses large cats, though Hoover spent his first months in the zoo's nursery. Born in Jacksonville, Fla., Hoover was shipped to Chicago by plane in August.

Although he has quickly caught on to more adult pleasures, Hoover still has something of the child in him. He enjoys playing with children's toys, Ms. Strohmeyer said.

"HIS FAVORITE toy is a broken box that he has crushed down by jumping on," she said.

Hoover does have one bad habit that will have to be broken if he expects to get to know his new parents.

He likes to chew on fingers.

'Shroud' author backs authenticity

A PHOTOGRAPH OF JESUS CHRIST? Author Robert K. Wilcox thinks so, and tells why in his book, "Shroud," an investigation into the Shroud of Turin recently released by Macmillan Publishing Co.

by DAVE IBATA

A man from Florida says he has seen a photograph of Jesus Christ. He is not alone.

What started out as an investigation by a skeptic ended by making a believer of author Robert K. Wilcox, who says the Shroud of Turin, the purported burial cloth of Christ, is an authentic portrait of Jesus.

"To me it's an amazing thing, that there possibly could be a picture of Jesus, or any material evidence of him," Wilcox said.

"NOW THE NEW Testament accounts of him — that's good evidence; but a picture of him — that's something you can prove, that can be touched," Wilcox said.

Wilcox, of Miami, Fla., visited Chicago this week on a seven-city tour of the United States, promoting his book, "Shroud," recently published by the Macmillan Publishing Co. Inc., New York.

Wilcox, former religion editor for the Miami News, conducted a four-year investigation into the shroud, which is kept in a sealed casket at St. John's Cathedral in Turin, Italy. Wilcox's book is the culmination of that investigation, which took its author throughout Europe and the United States.

Research into the shroud began as a series of articles for the Miami News in 1973, when he had an opportunity to view the shroud. But as Wilcox's interest deepened, he quit the News and, with financial support from Macmillan, began digging.

WILCOX SAID he approached the subject of the shroud as a skeptic, determined to disprove the authenticity of the shroud.

"Of course, all my investigations went the other way," he said.

The shroud, according to Roman Catholic belief, is a burial cloth of Christ, of the type commonly used by the Jews of 1st Century Palestine.

Early disciples of Christ kept the shroud, which was passed on through the centuries through the Church until it reached its present resting place in Italy, according to Catholic history.

The shroud first was mentioned in historical documents in 1350. But the full significance of the ghostly image it bore was discovered in 1898, when a photographer took a picture of the cloth.

WHILE DEVELOPING the film, the photographer realized the negative produced a sharp positive image of a human body. The shroud, in effect, was a photographic negative — a negative that existed hundreds of years before the invention of photography.

"I know for certain the shroud wrapped the historical person Jesus," Wilcox said. "I also feel there is strong evidence of the resurrection in the cloth."

At first Wilcox believed the shroud probably was a hoax, a painting by a medieval monk or the ghastly record of a 14th-century corpse mutilated to resemble the body of Jesus, and then wrapped in a cloth to produce bloodstains.

However, Wilcox said he determined no one could have conceived of painting a negative centuries before photography and that even modern science is hard-pressed to duplicate so precise an image in a laboratory.

WILCOX SAID the weave of the cloth its details that conform to Scripture and to 1st century practices in Palestine and the Roman world, and the fact that the reputed body of Christ is depicted nude — sacrilege punishable by death as far as the Church was concerned, testified to the authenticity of the shroud.

Wilcox said he believes the image of the shroud was produced at the moment Jesus rose from the dead — in a searing burst of energy that scorched an image into the cloth.

"I had no faith, so to speak, before I started this, though I suppose is was latent inside of me," Wilcox said.

However, because of his investigation, he said, "I am convinced there is another life, there is another dimension, and the shroud certainly is strong proof of that."

Wheeling man charged in sale of illegal drugs

A Wheeling man charged with selling illegal drugs was earning more than $30,000 a week from the operation, police said Friday.

Police said John Novello, 27, of 216 E. Center St., Wheeling, was using his residence as a center for distributing drugs.

Novello was arrested Thursday and charged with dealing and possession of more than $100,000 worth of marijuana and cocaine, and possessiion of a .38-caliber revolver without registration, Wheeling Sgt. Michael Hermes said. Hermes said police discovered 125 pounds of marijuana and four ounces of cocaine in Novello's residence.

WHEELING POLICE and Cook County Sheriff's investigators teamed up to make the arrest after investigating Novello's actions for more than two months, Hermes said.

"We think Novello was selling the drugs mainly to high school students," Hermes said. "There has been an increase in marijuana busts lately, but we don't know if this is connected with Novello's dealing in such a large supply."

Hermes said investigators started closing in on Novello after neighbors started complaining about cars coming and going from his rome late at night.

"Our next step is to find out where he got all the drugs," Hermes said. "We have several leads.

Novello was released Friday on $10,000 bond. He is to appear at 9 a.m. Dec. 5 in the Niles branch of Cook County Circuit Court.

Korea payoff traced to '68 meeting

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The former head of the Korean CIA Friday traced Korea's Washington payoff operation to a 1968 meeting among himself, Tongsun Park and then Rep. Richard Hanna, D-Calif., saying Hanna agreed to "distribute money among U.S. congressmen."

Onetime masterspy Kim Hyung Wook testified that Tongsun Park, allegedly his key Capitol Hill operative, boasted that he was bribing congressmen "with much ease" by 1969 and passing out cash bundles of "$1,000, $2,000, $5,000 and $10,000 to . . . prominent officials."

But Kim said he could not vouch for Park's claims because no records were kept of what he did with the payoff money the KCIA sest him.

AS KIM TESTIFIED before the House Ethics Committee on the origins of the covert lobbying effort, Hanna was pleading innocent in Washington's U.S. District Court to federal charges that he helped Park in the Capitol Hill bribery operation.

Kim, who ran the KCIA from 1963 to 1969 but fled Korea four years ago, was the first ethics panel witness to link a member of Congress — Hanna, now a private citizen — by name to the alleged bribery scheme.

Committee counsel allowed him to break the no-names rule that has governed the first two days of hearing testimony because, they said, they considered Kim's information about Hanna to be "reliable."

He was also the first to discuss in detail the alleged role of Tongsun Park, the fugitive millionaire rice dealer indicted along with Hanna as a key operative in the Korean operation.

KIM SAID HE, Hanna and Park met in August, 1968, in Kim's Seoul office to discuss Park's desire to become chief broker for lucrative sales of U.S. rice to Korea.

"Hanna told me his state was California and it produces lots of rice," Kim testified. "He wanted Korea to buy rice from his state."

He said Hanna proposed making Park a middleman in the rice sales — which, in succeeding years, reportedly earned him about $9 million in commissions and allegedly helped bankroll his further efforts to influence U.S. legislation.

"Hanna said he, together with Mr. Tongsun Park, would distribute the money among U.S. congressmen and help Korea's cause," Kim said.

Hanna enters innocent plea in Korea case

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Former Rep. Richard T. Hanna, D-Calif., pleaded innocent Friday to 40 felony charges linking him to the South Korean bribery scandal and faces a weeks-long trial scheduled to start Jan. 9.

Hanna, 63, white-atired and wearing a closely trimmed mustache, stood calmly with his attorney, Charles A. McNelis, before U.S. District Judge William B. Bryant.

Bryant, after summing up the charges, asked, "How do you answer?"

"Not guilty, your honor," Hanna said quietly.

Bryant then told Hanna he can remain free while awaiting trial.

Justice Dept. attorney Jeffrey White told Bryant the prosecution evidence will take about three weeks to present at the trial. McNelis did not estimate how much time his defense would take.

Hanna was named Oct. 14 in a 40-count indictment charging him with conspiracy, bribery, mail fraud and failing to register as an agent of a foreign government while he was a member of Congress. Altogether, the counts carry maximum sentences totaling 27 years and fines totaling $51,000.

From 1967 to 1974, the indictment said, Hanna helped the South Korean government plan its lobbying campaign by suggesting how to distribute gifts and alleged bribes.

Hanna also was named as an unindicted co-conspirator in an indictment unsealed Sept. 6 against Tongsun Park, a South Korean rice trader accused of spending huge sums from his commissions to buy influence for his government.

Despite what critics say, a college degree is still a smart investment

by LUCIA MOUAT

WASHINGTON — Is a college education worth the time and money.

Some critics argue that for many people the answer is no — that plumbers, for example, make more money than many college-educated white-collar workers, yet paid no steep tuition fees.

But, especially for the sake of the family, college is worth it, economist and educator Howard R. Bowen contends.

IN A REPORT ABOUT to be published as a book, the former head of Grinnell College, the University of Iowa, and Claremont University Center argues that those with a college education behind them:

• Tend to have smaller, stronger families than those with less education.

• Have a better over-all feeling about their worth and tend to be more tolerant of those with different backgrounds and views.

• Maintain a strong interest in religion — although their observance of religious formalities, such as churchgoing, may wane.

• Earn more money and invest more time in their work.

"I think the case for higher education is overwhelming — it's enormously effective and productive," Dr. Bowen said in an interview here.

WITH THE SUPPORT of the Sloan Foundation and the Carnegie Council on Policy Studies in Higher Education, he has spent the last three years analyzing the results of hundreds of research studies that deal with the effects of a college education.

In his view, the most important impact of all is on the American family. Not only does a college education tend to delay the age of marriage and reduce the birthrate, he says, but it leads to sharp increases in the time, energy, and percentage of family income devoted to rearing chidren. Children respond to that increased attention by doing better in tests and schoolwork.

One study of 13 colleges by Burton Clark of Yale and others found that the education of parents is a better indicator of whether or not a child will go to college than family income.

Though it is sometimes argued that higher education alienates college-age children from their parents, a 1975 Gallup poll cited by Dr. Bowen showed that attitudes of college students toward their parents were instead strongly favorable an did not change over the four years of school.

THE COLLEGE experience also tends to narrow the traditional differences in men's and women's attitudes and behavior, Dr. Bowen says. Men are more apt to take an interest in child care, for instance while women, unless they have young children at home, are more apt to have jobs and take an interest in sports and public affairs. There is some evidence, too, according to Dr. Bowen, that the divorce rate among those with college educations tends to be lower.

The effect of a college education on religious beliefs is somewhat mixed.

Dr. Bowen cites three studies of the 1970s that show a drop-off in church attendance during college years. One study, for instance, finds a drop from 64 to 30 per cent in frequency of churchgoing between students' freshmen and senior years in college. A 1968 study found that among young people four years out of high school, the number of defectors from religion was higher among the college-educated, but that about half the college group claimed to value religion more than they did in high school.

For contrast, Dr. Bowen points to a strong rise in the number of religious courses offered on college campuses in the last 20 years and to the growing numbers of students who sign up for them. A 1974 American Council of Education report notes that the number of students enrolled for advanced degrees in religion almost tripled between 1960 and 1974.

THERE ARE SOME signs, too, that an interest in the formal religion later returns. Opinion polls in recent years, for instance, show church attendance significantly stronger among alumni than college seniors.

But do you ever really get that money you spent on college back into your wallet?

A number of studies cited in the Bowen report indicate that higher education is a very good investment. While a comparable dollar investment in stocks and bonds for instance would yield a 5 to 8 per cent return, the return on college costs in yearly earnings runs between 9 and 14 per cent. Those with college behind them earn more both right out of school and over a lifetime, the report concludes.

Also, the college-educated tend to spend longer hours on the job (one study says there is a potential increased output of 25 per cent per worker) and are more likely to take advantage of new job opportunities and adapt to chancing economic conditions. Also, those with a college education are far less likely to be unemployed for any length of time. They tend, too, to be better informed consumers and investors.

IRS joins church, state debate

David E. Anderson

World of religion

Is the government increasingly moving toward undermining the historic "wall of separation" between church and state?

If so, how much of it is of necessity?

Those are questions that have concerned a growing number of religious leaders — particularly as they view moves by the Internal Revenue Service.

BUT AT A RECENT conference on religious liberty sponsored by Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, a top-ranking IRS official defended the agency's growing involvement in religion.

Alvin D. Lurie, assistant commissioner of the IRS for employe plans and exempt organizations, told the conference that the IRS rules on "integrated auxiliaries" were designed to inhibit the "proliferation of the phoney church" and not aimed at involving the government in defining religion.

The issue of "integrated auxiliaries" has been a thorn in the side of the churches since the IRS first issued regulations which sought to distinguish between activities of churches which are "exclusively religious" and those which are not.

The churches contend that it is not proper for the government to make such distinctions because it involves definition of what is religion and what is not and thus is an unconstitutional infringement on the free exercise of religion.

LURIE MAINTAINED that the IRS had been forced into issuing the regulations and subsequent definitions of what does and does not constitute an integrated auxiliary for tax purpose by Congress.

The IRS, in response to the complaints by churches, had made "significant alterations" in the definition before putting the regulations into effect, Lurie said.

Laurence N Woodworth, assistant secretary of the Treasury for tax policy, also told the conference the government had been forced into defining religion.

He cited a case where an individual started his own church, and added, "whether that constitutes a religion or whether it doesn't, the government is forced into trying to draw a line somewhere there, otherwise anybody can step in and call anything they're engaged in a religious activity."

WOODWORTH SAID he would consider the possibility that the definition of the term integrated auxiliary — it now includes church-run hospitals but not colleges, orphanages or homes for the aged — could be changed to some extent but he did not go into specifics.

One participant, however, Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y. told the conference he woul consider introducing a bill which would repeal the tax code provisions that introduced the prickly term "integrated auxiliary."

"I enjoy an occasional chance to kick (the) Treasury in the face," Conable told the conference.

Congress should eliminate retirement age exceptions

The Congressional proposal to raise the mandatory retirement age from 65 to 70 is a good step toward providing greater flexibility for older workers in society.

However, the senate version of the retirement age change, passed this week, contains some arbitrary discrimination against some workers that ought to be eliminated in the final law.

The U.S. House has already passed a retirement bill changing mandatory retirement from 65 to 70 which treats all workers alike. The senate version would give businesses and colleges and universities the right to impose a mandatory retirement age of 65 for tenured college teachers and for high level business executives, specifically those whose pension would be $20,000 a year or more.

Sponsors of the exemptions in the senate bill argue that allowing mandatory retirement at 65 for professors and top executives will open those jobs to members of minority groups and women who have been excluded from those jobs in the past.

The problem with the exemptions is that, while it is true that allowing professors and top managers to stay until age 70 will keep out younger people, that argument could also apply to all jobs.

Will forcing vice presidents of corporations, for example, to retire at 65 help significant numbers of minority persons and women if middle management posts — the branch managers and assistant managers — are filled by persons who can work until 70?

The overriding argument in favor of raising the mandatory retirement age is that society cannot afford to lose the expertise of productive men and women age 65 to 70 and that it is unfair to those persons as individuals to force them out of the job market before they are ready.

One direct result of this increased fairness for older persons will be — indeed must be — tightening the job market at the other end. It is hard to assess the precise impact because no one at this point knows how many persons will choose to work until 70. But it is undeniable that the impact will be present.

Present trends toward lower rates of population growth will minimize the hardship of the retirement age change over the long term. And society has increasingly recognized the older persons have as much right to protection from discrimination as other social groups.

As congressional leaders wrestle with the final version of the retirement age bill, they should strive to treat all elderly workers alike and to provide choices for them. Changing the allowed mandatory retirement age should not be allowed to force persons to work after 65 if they don't want to. It should simply give them the option to continue.

Carter learns that words deadly serious in Mideast

Paul Greenberg

The showdonw in the Middle East, when it comes, may be between Jimmy Carter and his State Department. For months now, the (brand, spankin') new President has been following the State Department's line, trying to get a peaceful gesture or just a non-discouraging word out of the Palestine Liquidation Organization (Schoolchildren Our Specialty).

Typical of the President's lures was this statement at a recent press conference: "If the PLO accepts UN 242 and the right of Israel to exist, then we would begin discussions with the leaders of the PLO." But even if the PLO accepts an ambiguous UN resolution, even if it blanks out the repeated clauses of its charter calling for the destruction of Israel, can it change its spots? Is there anything in its history, spirit or actions that would lead anyone outside the State Department to believe that a nice, peaceful mini-state next to Israel would be the PLO's last territorial demand?

In response to the President's overtures, the PLO has issued a series of bellicose resolutions and still more damnations of "American imperialism." But Carter continued to reach out for the magic note that somehow would soothe its savage beast. Like a determined musician playing an unstrung harp.

FOR MONTHS NOW, the Israelis have looked on this curious concert with wry condescension, having tried it themselves a couple of decades, four wars, and innumerable acts of terrorism ago. Carter's offer of direct negotiations in exchange for some, for any, sign of peaceful intent is roughly where the Israelis were 5,000 casualties back. They have learned many a bitter and bloddy lesson since, and are determined not to repeat the course.

What the Israelis do not find amusing is the language of the State Department, which has begun to correspond to that the Soviet Union uses about the Middle East. What stood out in the Joint Soviet-American communique on the Geneva Conference was a reference to "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people," an innocuous phrase only to those who know nothing of the Middle East. It is the standing language in the Arab world for the extirpation of Israel.

Those words ignited a firestorm in Mideast diplomacy and Moshe Dayan, now Israel's foreign minister, was dispatched to put it out. After a marathon session with the President and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance at the White House, he seemed to have succeeded. The joint Israeli-American statement negated the State Department's agreement with the Soviets only the week before, declaring it "not a prerequisite for the reconvening and conduct of the Geneva Conference." The offensive catch-phrase about the-legitimate-rights-of-the Palestinians was dropped and in its place there were references to UN resolutions that would seem to close the door to the PLO at Geneva.

WAHT'S MORE, the Israelis and Americans agreed upon a procedure for Geneva that, after an opening session with a Pan-Arab delegation, would alow the Israilis to negotiate individually with their neighbors, an opportunity they have sought for some 30 years. Ol' One Eye can be quite pleased with himself, and with Jimmy Carter.

Israeli confidence in the Carter Administration may never be quite the same, but the President did seem to have gone to considerable length to assure the Israelis.

Meanwhile, at Foggy Bottom, the State Department has been issuing a flurry of explanations, assurances, amplifications and disclaimers — everything but the clear reversal of its policy called for. The most astounding of the statements came from Cyrus Vance himself. The secretary of state claimed that the Israelis should have been "gratified" by the Soviet-American declaration.

It is inconceivable that Israel would be gratified by any communique that used the PLO's own words for its destruction. And it is unbelievably naive for an American secretary of state to claim that the Israelis should welcome such a verbal cave-in. Words can be taken with deadly seriousness, especially in the Middle East.

THESE PARTICULAR words — "the legitimate rights of the Palestinians" — carry an explosive connotation for those familiar with their use. It is as though an American secretary of state in the 1930s had spoken of the unfair Versailles Treaty and the legitimate German need for Lebensraum. In the abstract, there might be some justification for both judgments. But in the context of the politics of the time, to have adopted such a vocabulary would have constituted an invitation to aggression and barbarism.

To believe that a distinguished and experienced American diplomat was innocent of what this particular phrase means in the context of the Mideast is to disqualify him from any serious role in the diplomacy of that area — on the grounds of an ignorance and insensitivity unusual even in the State Department.

It is easier to believe that Vance well understood that the Israelis would be displeased, but that he failed to appreciate the scope and intensity of their reaction. Instead of representing another small slice off their security, these words went to the very heart of their concerns. Words can be taken with deadly seriousness, especially in the Middle East. As Moshe Dayan now seems to have helped the President understand.

IF CYRUS VANCE learned little from this experience, one can hope that Jimmy Carter has learned a great deal, including a new wariness toward the words his State Department may slip into his speeches.

This promises to be a long struggle, not only between Arabs and Israelis but between Foggy Bottom and the White House. When it comes to the Mideast, presidents and diplomats have a record of pulling in opposite directions that goes back at least to Harry Truman's time and maybe Woodrow Wilson's. But to judge by the most recent communique out of the White House, this President seems to be developing a whip hand. He may need it.

I was very interested in your editorial of Oct. 3 regarding the situation at River, Old Willow Road and Milwaukee Avenue and the fatalities plus accidents that have occurred at this point. Everything you wrote is so true and every day we must subject our lives literally to this danger.

I live at Dundee and Baldwin Roads in Palatine Township in a development called "Hidden Creek" by Kennedy. There is also "Dundee Quarters" — apartments, how many I do not know; Arrowhead Apartments; Heritage Manor town homes; Village in the Sun town homes and under construction the Edinborough Apartments and to the south on Nichols Road a great number of single family homes by Pasquinelli Brothers.

Most of the residents of the area use Baldwin Road to exit, turning right or left on Dundee Road. It is a hair-raising experience, takes many extra moments to "get out" due to the traffic on Dundee with Route 53 also exiting as the expressway terminates. Speed is 55 miles per hour.

Meetings with the Governor's Council on Traffic Highway Safety brought the usual response. Unincorporated area; private road must be upgraded by developers then deeded to the township; then the wait for a signal to be included in the budget. All is quite correct and legal, but when the fatalities occur, then what? There are a great number of school buses that must exit at this intersection in the morning and evening.

Is there any way we can get help before a tragic accident occurs? Even a lower speed limit or a pause in the lights at Dundee Road over Route 53 giving us a break.

I have often thought of having one of our Department of Transportation officials try and make a turn into traffic traveling 55 MPH and sometimes faster. Maybe they would then try to understand the frustration of residents caught in this maelstrom of rules and regulations at the cost of lives.

Night racing hit

Why did the Arlington Heights Village Board of Trustees give the race track permission to hold night racing here?

Was it out of love and fellowship for the people who live and work here, and who love to have peace and quiet after 10 o'clock?

Please gentlewoman and gentlemen, the noise of the airplanes, hot-rodders, motorcycles and faulty home burglar alarms are quite enough to disturb the peace after 10 o'clock.

Trustee answers recall editorial

I want to take exception to an editorial of Saturday, October 15, in the Wheeling Daily Herald. First, it gives the reader the impression that the suggestions made by Village Atty. Garfield in regard to the proposed recall ordinance were, in fact, an ordinance under consideration. Mr. Garfield has not offered an ordinance; he has offered points to be considered when writing an ordinance. Second, it gives the impression that this board would pass an ordinance that would intentionally circumvent the purpose of a recall ordinance.

We will pass the first recall ordinance in the state. It will become a landmark ordinance which will be examined and copied by other home rule communities throughout the state. Needless to say, when preparing an ordinance of such magnitude, one must be sure that it is, indeed, legal and when first tested in court will withstand the testing.

This ordinance will not be written and passed to satisfy small, politically active groups, but to give the majority of the community an additional safeguard against abuses by the elected officials.

The Daily Herald could well give Wheeling, its citizens and elected officials credit for undertaking something untried and untested, rather than using it as an opportunity for further criticism.

I hope that by making this statement, I have laid to rest any fears that this board will not act promply and judiciously in passing a good piece of legislation.

Industrial park will help Streamwood taxpayers

The new industrial park in Streamwood planned for 40 acres near Lake Street and Park Boulevard will be an important addition to that community.

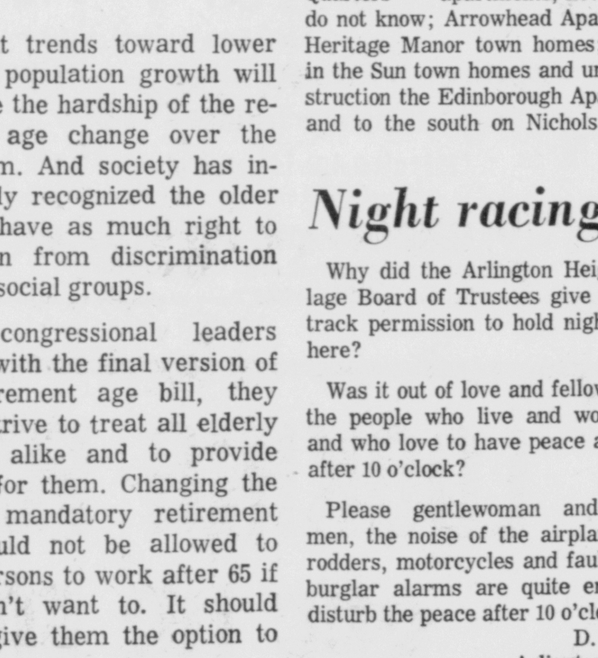
For too long, Streamwood has been bypassed by commercial developers. The result is a community with little industrial tax base and over-dependence upon property taxes of homeowners to carry the burden of local services. With the development of the Nardi and Co. Inc. Industrial Park, Streamwood may begin to get its share of new industries and businesses.

One of the key ingredients of bringing new business to town is an awareness of the need for a broadened tax base to relieve the burden on single family homeowners. Streamwood officials had that goal in mind when they discussed the industrial park plan recently. Trustee Jack Fehlandt pointed out several benefits of an expanded industrial park including business license fees and other taxes on the industrial sector.

But local officials must remember that business must have incentives to locate in a community, and a major consideration is a positive business attitude on the part of the community leaders.

Fehlandt said industrial developers haven't been interested in Streamwood for 20 years. Using other Northwest suburban communities as examples, Streamwood how should get its share of new industrial development.

Berry's world



"I'm on my 'steel industry diet' — I just think about what"s happening to it and I lose my appetite!"

She opposes day care in schools

I am opposed to the privately-funded after school day care program for the following reasons:

1) The results of the questionnaire do not conclusively reflect a sufficient need;

2) It will only serve to promote a tempting alternative for parents who may not have a serious need. There is no substitute for Mom and Dad; they should receive encouragement to stay with their children;

3) It will be pre-requisite to a more comprehensive federally financed program once the "sufficient need" is established down the line. This will only add to the long list of social programs already instituted. Can the taxpayers afford much more?

I am a mother of two small children. I, too, am being forced to supplement my husband's income. Fortunately I have found a way to do it at home. Therefore, I have complete empathy with the problems of trying to make ends meet in this economic crunch. But I am opposed to the people of America looking at the government to solve all their problems.

Other countries, such as Sweden and Hungary, have travelled this path before only to find thier banner of "liberation and equality for all" to be waving in an enslaved socialistic or communistic breeze.

Is this what America wants? If so, let's keep supporting more social programs and placing heavier burdens upon the taxpayers — and we'll soon be there.

Why wasn't Judge Ritter investigated years ago?

Watch on Washington

The recent critical Justice Dept. report on the record of a cantankerous federal judge in Utah is as much an indictment of the judicial system and of the Supreme Court as it is of the specific United States District Judge.

The 1,500-page report was filed to justify action to bar United States District Judge Willis W. Ritter, the chief U.S. federal judge in Utah, from hearing any cases involving the federal government.

It is asserted by the Justice Dept. that Judge Ritter's record of outrageous judicial behavior has "destroyed public confidence in (his) ability to administer justice."

BUT THE COMPLAINTS about Judge Ritter's arbitrary actions and bizarre conduct are nothing new. The Justice Dept., the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals and the United States Supreme Court have known of those persistent reports for more than 20 years, and permitted it to continue despite the fact that Judge Ritter's actions were the subject of well-documented complaints in appeals from his decisions.

Although Judge Ritter's conduct has become more outrageous in recent years, the 78-year-old jurist was the subject of a large number of complaints within a few years after he was appointed to the federal bench in 1949.

For years Judge Ritter ruled the roost in Utah as the only United States District Judge in that state. Even when a second judge was provided, Judge Ritter continued as chief judge with total control over the administration of the federal courts in Utah and with wide discretion on which cases he would handle and which would be turned over to the other federal judge.

Despite the fact that Judge Ritter's conduct came to the attention of the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals on many occasions, and despite the fact that the details of his conduct resulted in periodic reprimands, the judges of the Tenth Circuit took no action to institute an investigation of Judge Ritter until recently.

LIKEWISE, THE United States Supreme Court had official as well as unofficial notice of the sad state of affairs in Judge Ritter's court, but took no initiative to remove Judge Ritter or to stimulate a congressional investigation that might have led to impeachment.

When Chief Justice Earl Warren and Chief Justice Warren Burger spoke of the need for court reform they seldom if ever made reference to evidence of corruption, incompetence or arbitrary actions they knew existed. They were usually plugging for higher pay for the federal judiciary, and made no reference to the weaknesses in the machinery for investigating and removing bad judges.

And, with full awareness that Judge Ritter is only one of a host of problem judges, the Supreme Court consistently rejected all suggestions for reform to make it possible to remove problem judges.

Apparently, under the present law, the only method of removing a judge is by impeachment, which must be initiated in the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

If the allegations in the 1,500-page petition are true, and there is no reason to challenge them, the House Judiciary Committee should initiate action immediately to impeach Judge Ritter, unless he resigns.

The only good that can flow from the Judge Ritter case is the impetus it may give to the Judicial Tenure Act pending in a Senate judiciary subcommittee to provide an alternate to impeachment for removal of problem judges.

Certainly, it should be apparent now that there should be some check on the total independence of the federal judiciary. It is essential to take some action so independence is not an impregnable sanctuary for the continuation on the bench of crooks, incompetents, drunks and cantankerous egotists. That is the present system.

Meyer's seal of approval puts a jinx on everything

If you should happen to ask me to recommend a good show or veterinarian or dress shop and I don't answer you, it will be because I recently took my final vow of silence. On the practice of recommending, that is.

This occasion was prompted by a phone call at work while some new office lines were being intalled and there was an occasional lousy connection.

Naturally, I got the lousiest just as a lady called to ask if we would recommend a good tree surgeon in the area. Although I explained that it was not the policy of this newspaper to recommend anything, the lady pleaded desperation.

THEREFORE, out of the goodness of my heart and emphasizing that this was a personal recommendation and not to be regarded otherwise, I mentioned the name of a satisfactory outfit I had once hired.

Turned out that the lady had said "knee surgeon," not "tree surgeon," and she reported me to the publisher for being a sadistic smartmouth.

Actually, the knee surgeon-tree surgeon fiasco was merely the last straw — all my life I've been horrendously helpful about recommending things. But no more.

I used to reommend a restaurant because the service was excellent, the food above-average and the prices not out of line.

BUT IF A friend tried the place, it had changed hands or the chef just caught his wife cheating or three of the six waitresses had called in sick.

Once it was all three. The prices had gone through the roof, the chef did likewise and burned everything including the salad, and the dishwasher was pressed into service as a waiter. And my former friend spread the word that I sure must not get around much if I thought THAT place was something special.

I also will never again recommend a beauty parlor.

With the kind of hair I have almost nobody ever says, "Gee, your hair looks great, where did you have it done," so the only time that happened I was so thrilled I recommended again.

NEXT DAY MY ex-friend named me as copconspirator in a lawsuit. Seems that the one-in-a-million chance of something bad happening happened during the dye job and her hair turned green.

Then there was the time I bragged about an auto mechanic, and another former friend ended up in the ditch when the hood of her car flew up in the midst of rush hour traffic.

If I recommend a certain brand of food the Food and Drug Administration makes it No. 1 on the no-no list.

I can't even recommend a shoemaker last he be called away on a family emergency and his apprentice puts two left soles on the shoes of still another ex-friend of mine.

If I ever get famous, ad agencies ought to pay me a bundle to stay out of their television commercials.

'Diamond' traffic plan not an ace

by JUDITH FRUTIG

Los Angeles — Few public matters divert southern Californians from their sun-struck pursuits — but nobody can tamper with the traffic, as the battle-weary California Dept. of Transportation has just confirmed.

It all began March 15, 1976 (a day known locally as "mad Monday"), with the inauguration of the "diamond lane" project, a special freeway lane reserved for buses and cars with at least three riders. The project broke down 21 weeks later in the midst of a public revolt.

Now, according to a just-issued government report, the anti-diamond lane riders were right:

WHILE CREDITING the project's success in increasing car-pool ridership, by 65 per cent . . . and causing bus ridership to more than triple, the study concluded: ". . .nonetheless, energy savings and air-quality improvements were insignificant, freeway accidents increased significantly, non-car-poolers lost far more time than car-poolers gained, and a heated public outcry developed which has delayed the implementation of other preferential treatment projects" in southern California.

The experiment involved setting aside one westbound and one eastbound lane of the Santa Monica Freeway, a heavily traveled link between the central city and the westside, Oceanview district. The affected lanes were marked with white diamonds (the standard symbol for preferential traffic lanes) and intended for use during rush hours (6-10 a.m. and 3-7 p.m.) weekdays.

Instead of cooperation, the diamond land brought an uproar unmatched since the 1969 Los Angeles earthquake, and an outpouring of some of the same tactics that American colonials extended to the despised Stamp Act, including:

- Sabotage (nails and tacks strewn in front of traffic police).
- Deception (passenger seat props consisting of mannequins and such objects as tennis rackets and broom handles disguised as people).
- Cheating (single-occupant cars scooting from stalled regular lanes into nearly empty diamond lanes as soon as traffic officers were otherwise occupied).
- Open revolt (at least one early morning motorist temporarily obliterated one stretch of diamond insignias by scattering plastic bags of white paint).
- And finally, a successful civil lawsuit (the project was officially suspended when U.S. District Judge Matthew Byrne ordered an injunction pending the outcome of environmental studies).

THE STUDY REPRESENTS the first federal evaluation of the project. For hopeful officials who have been watching from other traffic-congested cities, there were some other positive findings of the report:

Car-pool-lane speeds were faster and more consistent than pre-project mileage with car-poolers saving from five to six minutes over travel times posted in regular lanes.

The most negative findings in the report involved accidents. "Freeway accidents," researchers noted, "rose markedly during the 21-week project. An average of 25 accidents per week occurred during . . . operating hours, roughly 2½ times the weekly pre-project average."

RTA mulls use of Soo lines for city commuters

by LYNN ASINOF

The Regional Transportation Authority is considering the establishment of commuter rail service on the Soo Line R. R. as part of a regional rail study in its preliminary stages.

The proposed service would run from Antioch to Des Plaines, with stations at major towns. In Des Plaines the train would switch to the Chicago and North Western Ry. tracks and continue to downtown Chicago.

Since 1965, the Village of Wheeling and some Lake County officials have been asking the Soo Line to reinstitute passenger service.

"WE DISCONTINUED all of our passenger train operations," said John Bergene, spokesman for the Soo Line. "We didn't have that many people who were riding the trains."

The RTA, however, is taking a new look at Soo Line, which now is exclusively a freight line.

"We are looking at all possible alternatives that have been suggested," said Howard Permut, transportation planner for the RTA. He said, however, it is too early to know whether the Soo Line proposal is feasible.

"We haven't tried to figure out if the Soo Lines makes sense or makes more sense than others," he said. The study results aren't expected until next summer, he said.

Bergene, however, said he foresees some problems in trying to start a commuter service on a freight line. He said the commuter trains would make it more difficult to schedule freight trains. The track is regulated out of Stevens Point, Wis., he said.

"I can see that as a problem immediately," he said, noting that such long distance operations won't work well.

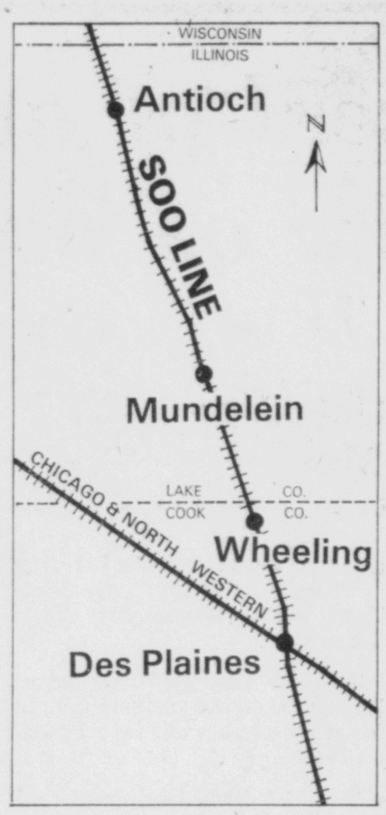
THE SOO LINE has rejected several requests from Wheeling officials to start such a service, because the railroad was "not in a position to comply with the request."

A Lake County Board member F. T. Mike Graham has asked that the money intended for the extension of Ill. Rte. 53 into Lake County be used instead to improve the Soo Line.

In 1976, Graham suggested that $84.2 million earmarked for the project be used to establish passenger service.

In a letter to the RTA, Graham said, "Realizing the present use of the Soo Line is limited to freight service, it would seem to the layman that the $84 million earmarked for the construction of Rte. 53 would provide us with rail passenger service second to none and save 1,000 acres of Illinois' finest farm land, not to mention the traffic congestion, added pollution and further destruction of an already threatened environment."

The RTA study will also look at new and expanded service on railroads and rapid transit lines.



COMMUTER SERVICE on the Soo Line R.R. is being studied by the Regional Transportation Authority as part of a regional rail study. The line runs from Wisconsin to Des Plaines, where it intersects with the Chicago and North Western Ry. tracks.

'Don't get complacent,' builders told

Higher home prices, more red tape forecast

Warnings of a decline in home purchases because of higher prices and government intervention were forecast this week.

John Hart, former president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, told builders rising costs are pricing prospective buyers out of the market, and may prompt harmful government interference.

Hart spoke this week at the opening of Expo '77, the Home Builders Assn. of Greater Chicago's Home and Apartment Exposition at the O'Hare Exposition Center in Rosemont.

AN ESTIMATED 9,000 representatives of the home building industry attended the exposition, where seminars were conducted and 111 exhibits by private firms and government agencies were on display. The two-day trade show, which was closed to the public, ended Thursday.

Hart said in an interview after his speech, "Although we've had an excellent year, don't get complacent, because I think home buyers in the marketplace are buying today because next year they might not afford housing."

'Inflation in housing is at a much more rapid pace than regular inflation.'

The government then may step in, and impose artificial supports, Hart said.

"And for every ounce of help they give us, they take back a pound of flesh," he said.

HART BLAMED excessive government regulations, particularly by bureaucrats who are not answerable to voters, as culprits in pushing prices higher.

"It's just basically the psychology of everybody in government that they've got to write some sort of regulation because that's what they're put there for," Hart said.

For example, he said the U.S. Civil Service issued 67,000 pages of regulations in 1976.

Such regulations probably account for 25 per cent of a home builder's costs, Hart said.

"INFLATION IN housing is at a much more rapid pace than regular inflation," he said. "We think that's been brought about by overregulation in most cases, and curtailment of free supply of some of the basic product needs we have."

Hart said one solution to overregulation would be to have Congress put aside all regular duties for a two- to four-year period, and except for emergency legislation, work only on reviewing, rewriting or eliminating bureaucratic rules.

After his speech, Hart and William Kennedy, president of the Homebuilders of Greater Chicago, officiated a ribbon-cutting ceremony that officially opened Expo '77.

Kennedy described the show as an "educational event" designed to keep home builders updated on product trends of the industry.

"WE HAVE a great need to get all builders to educate themselves and to grow with conditions of change in the economy," Kennedy said.

Builders from Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri and Wisconsin attended the exposition, he said.

Hart said, "Exhibitors are able to make more calls here in a two-day period than they can make over a three-month period on the road."

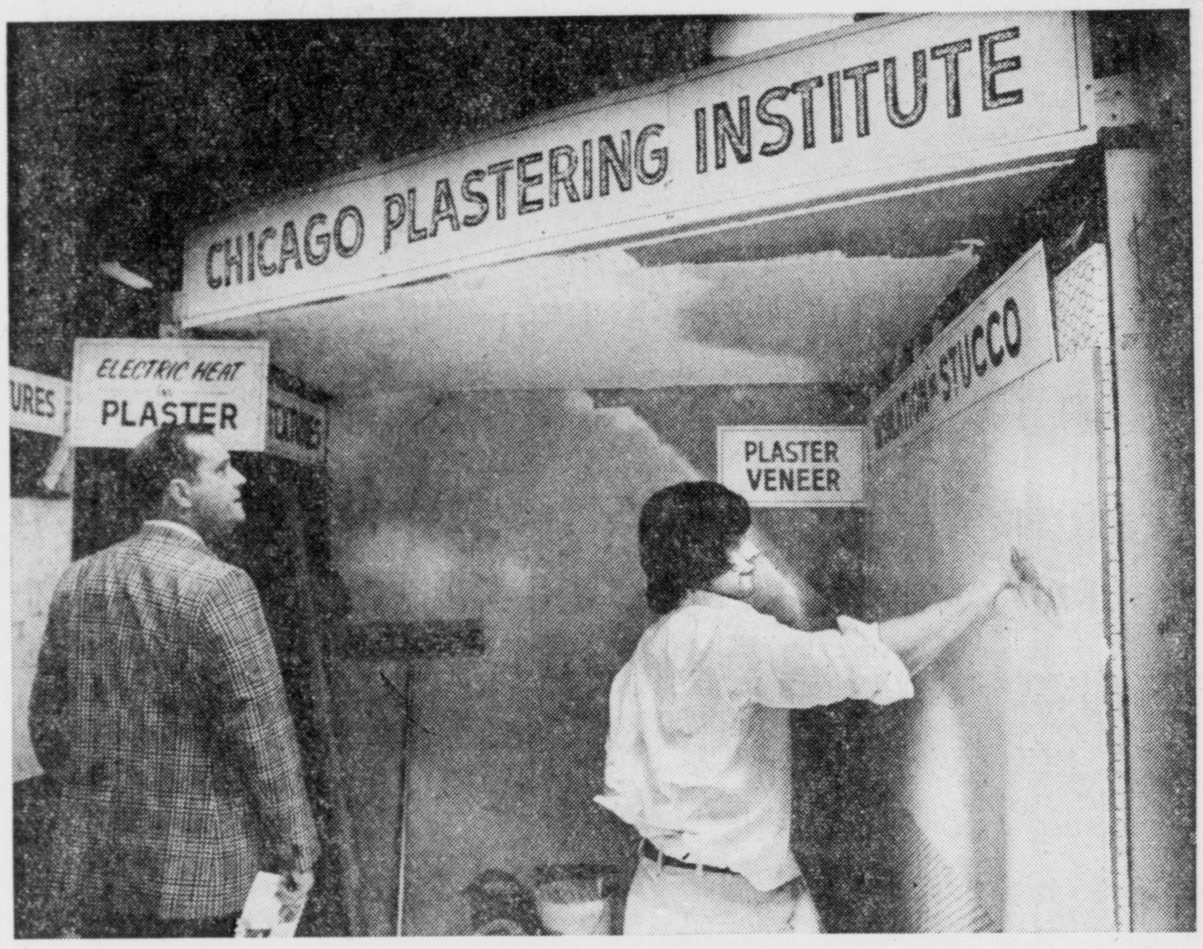
Techniques and products designed to make homes more energy-efficient were prominent in the display area.

AMONG THE exhibitors were manufacturers of insulating materials, heat pumps and solar water heaters.

One of the more unusual energy-conscious displays was that of Thermography of Illinois Inc., a Sleepy Hollow firm that uses an infrared television camera to discover areas of heat loss in a home.

Manufacturers of home appliances and building materials, the trade press, utilities and regional, state and national governments also brought exhibits.

During the show, seminars were conducted by the U.S. Dept. of Energy, the Federal Energy Administration, the U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, the Metropolitan Sanitary District and Illinois Bell Telephone, among others.



STUCK ON STUCCO. Jim Sommema demonstrates one way to add to a home's insulation. Energy consciousness highlighted Expo '77, a local trade show for the home building industry.

Got a small yard? Keep it simple

George Creed

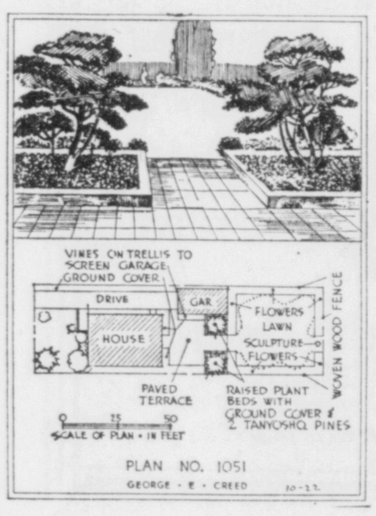
It's your landscape

Simplicity is the keynote of all good landscape planning. This is especially critical in the case of small properties where space is limited.

The tendency seems to be to add just a few more things to the landscape of a small yard and instead of attaining simplicity you get clutter. Planning for a small property requires very careful attention to detail and to the arrangement of areas.

In this plan an effort has been made to keep the backyard as "open in feeling" as possible within the fenced-in area.

WITH A LOT only measuring 40 feet by 135 feet and with an older house and detached garage occupying 1,116 square feet out of a total of 5,400 square feet, it is apparent that only a simple treatment will insure, or at least approach, an "open feeling."



Much of this is accomplished in the accompanying plan by making the main element of the backyard a simple uncluttered lawn surrounded by narrow beds of flowers and shrubs.

An ample (16-foot by 20-foot) paved terrace is a private area with a fence on one side of it and a garage on the other side. Morning glories on a trellis provide a handsome floral display during the summer months while their foliage hides the side of the garage. English ivy used instead of the morning glories on the trellis would give a year 'round evergreen cover but no colorful blooms.

The view from the terrace is framed by two picturesque pine trees. These are planted in raised beds covered with English ivy. Included in this view is a sculpture at the rear of the property. This is placed on the axis or center line of the opening between the two raised plant beds.

This is a rather formal design but it could easily be made less formal by changing the lines of the flower beds into a series of curves as suggested by the dotted outlines on the plan.

In a border planting I have some violet plants. These have begun to spread into a lawn. What can I do to prevent their spread?

Any preparation containing 2, 4-D will kill these plants.

Is there any way to control quack grass?

Yes, you can smother it by covering it with soil, tar paper or a heavy mulch.

A suspended ceiling

A suspended ceiling with indented borders that produce a three-dimensional floating effect has been introduced by Armstrong Cork Co., Lancaster, Pa.

The "tegular" recessed-grid ceiling resembles a conventional suspended ceiling in all respects other than the panels, which are 2 feet by 2 feet and protrude below grid flanges.

The panel face of the "Bravada" ceiling is prefabricated to resemble rough-trowled plaster.

Countryside West introduces a new ranch

A new model has been introduced at the Illinois Communities Division/U.S. Home development, Countryside West in Lake Zurich.

A 2,197-square-foot ranch, the "Lancaster," has three bedrooms, two full baths, an attached two-car garage. It is priced from $91,900.

Standard features of the "Lancaster" include wall-to-wall carpeting, double oven and hooded range, dishwasher and food disposal, double sink, wood cabinetry, ceramic-tiled walls in the bathrooms, wood windows, a gas forced-air heating system and a sodded front yard.

Four other models also are available at Countryside West, ranging in price from $76,990 to $91,990. Two models are three-bedrooms, and two are four-bedrooms, all featuring 2½ baths and attached two-car garages.

All prices are subject to change.

The models are open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. daily and are located on Cuba Road west of Rand Road, Lake Zurich.

More room is developer's goal

Spacious design modeled after single-family homes was the goal of the designer of the Mission Hills Country Club Village in Northbrook, said the developers, Eugene R. Corley Builders.

Features of the two-bedroom "condominium type A" at Mission Hills include two full baths, two entrances, a fireplace, a combined breakfast area and kitchen separate from living and dining rooms, an entry foyer, a laundry room, and two sets of sliding glass doors to an exterior balcony.

The unit offers 1,573 square feet of living space and is priced from $79,000 to $89,000. Other floor plans ranging in size from 1,746 to 2,550 square feet are available from $97,000 to $179,000.

THREE-BEDROOM townhomes, offering from 2,155 to 2,655 square feet, are priced from $145,000 to $179,000. All prices are subject to change.

Standard features of Mission Hills condominium apartments include wall-to-wall carpeting, a washer and dryer, refrigerator with icemaker, garbage disposal and compactor, oven and range, and air conditioning and electronic air cleaner.

Recreational facilities include an 18-hole golf course, tennis courts and a country club with an indoor pool, saunas, whirlpool bath, exercise room, game rooms, locker rooms, hospitality rooms, restaurant, cocktail lounge and pro shop.

A security service also is provided.

The Mission Hills sales office is at 1655 W. Mission Hills Rd., Northbrook, along Sanders Road north of Willow Road. Models are open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays and from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. weekends, or by appointment by calling 498-3200.

A house designed for outdoor living

Jean-Paul Saint-Michel

Home of your own

This is a particularly exciting design because its main purpose is to provide the maxiumu outdoor living and entertaining areas.

In effect, it is an elevated ranch house of contemporary appearance but unusual in almost every respect.

The main concept is the elevating of all the usual living areas off the ground, supported by both columns and walls.

THE SPACE BENEATH the living quarters becomes a casual recreational area plus a service facility with range top and built-in rotisserie, snack bar, refrigerator and a covered porch ideal for outdoor dining. This is in addition to the upstairs kitchen. On this same level is what might be termed a "grade-level basement" and heater room; a workshop, laundry room; pool locker rooms with toilet facilities and three-car garage.

And more — there is a swimming pool, an open court with a garden, a second open garden and covered porch as well as an open terrace and a covered porch in the pool area.

An especially unique design feature is the manner in which the upper rooms form a "skywell" in the center of the house. This affords a double view of most rooms and provides exceptional ventilation of the whole.

The house is entered through a covered porch (a covered way also leads from the house to the garage) into a foyer and then to the upstairs by way of a circular stairway.

ON THE UPPER level is a 25 foot by 13 foot 4 inch living room; and an 11 foot by 12 foot dining room. From the living room by way of sliding glass doors is a porch that also can serve the master bedroom, with its separate bathroom with tub. From the circular staircase on the right is the kitchen that has a breakfast area and a walk-in food storage cupboard.

A second stairway leads down to the service entrance and lower recreational area. Continuing around the well one finds the other three bedrooms that are serviced by two bathrooms with tubs, one having a double vanity.

A hallway around the open well connects all three as well as the master bedroom, thereby eliminating the necessity to reach the sleeping quarters through the living area.

No excavation is necessary for the basement since this space is located on grade. The garage provides space for three cars — one of them for a "compact."

Masonry walls provide complete privacy in the pool area.

'Families moving up'

Young families that started out with "starter homes" in Hanover Park, Streamwood and Schaumburg in the late '60s and early '70s today are moving up to more expensive homes in Arlingdale Development Group's Country Place in Bartlett, the developer said.

Country Place opened in the autumn of 1975, and within three months sold out the first phase of 104 homes.

One model currently being offered at Country Place is The Elmdale, a T-shaped ranch listed at $70,490. The Elmdale features a raised 18-foot living room, a separate dining room, a patio area with sliding glass doors, a master bedroom with private bath, a full bath serving two other bedrooms and a basement.

All Country Place homes offer wall-to-wall carpeting, ceramic tile baths, separate dining rooms, attached garages with interior entrance and kitchens with oven, range, dishwasher and disposal.

Prices range from $56,990 to $70,490. All prices are subject to change.

Models are open daily from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. The models are located on Devon Avenue, west of Ontarioville Road.

New vinyl floor easier to put on

The Armstrong Cork Co. has introduced a vinyl floor that can be fastened down only at the sides of the room, eliminating the need for an underlayment, the firm has announced.

To install a new vinyl floor over an existing floor, most homeowners find they first must cover the old surface with an underlayment of plywood or hardboard, the Lancaster, Pa., firm said.

Armstrong said its new "premier Sundial" vinyl floor does not need to be glued down, and thus bridges most defects in the old floor.

The firm said homeowners can save up to $5 a yard in installation costs by using the new floor.

SUBURBAN LIVING

THE DAILY HERALD

Surprise, surprise! Men enjoy the feel of a plush, soft bed, too

Carolyn Murray

Your home

Well, the ballots are counted, and guys like to sleep in silky, satiny bed-dressings, just as much as gals do. This comes as little surprise to our male readers. But some interior designers and wives seem to be the last to know!

Deliciousness and luxuriousness appeal to us all. The Spartan life is something we occasionally impose on ourselves for reasons of economy, availability or perhaps spirituality. There may be times when we like to put away the things that are rather sensual and concentrate on pure spirit. Luxury sometimes gets in the way.

But, in general, the tired body needs good support for sleep. And after walking hard pavements or monotonous office floors and after standing through meal preparation, laundry and gardening chores, that comfy bed seems a natural reward.

SO TOSS OUT those old cliche ideas about the man-tailored, beige and brown room for boys, junior and senior. Let the men speak for themselves, and don't expect their sleep comfort to reflect any old ideas we had about masculine preference.

Today's illustration seems, by yesterday's standards, a proper place for a woman. But pop a king-size bed into the same setting, and it's a neat "share" space for young or old parents.

The big upholstered headboard allows easy sit-up reading comfort, and kids will jump in with Mom and Dad for Sunday comic-reading sessions.

The coral and aqua color scheme is unisex, too. It begins in the delightful "Wisteria" patterned wallcovering and window fabric by Greef Fabrics, Inc. This pattern is from their "Carlisle" collection and is printed on a sand-colored background.

The headboard gets a repeat of the sand and aqua colors with the dust ruffle and carpeting going the aqua route. Coral shadings sneak in again through pillowcases and in the ceramic cachepot used to hold plants.

Another detail men like is the use of a puffy, lightweight conforter that keeps its position all through the night. This scalloped and bow-knotted version doesn't have to be taken off and folded up, the way some of our heavier daytime bed covers used to be treated. And there's more warmth with less weight.

A final planning tip is to allow room for two chairs and a table if possible. In this room, the little window niche does the job. A private breakfast or late coffee or tea break here can be made part of the slow-down ritual before sleep.

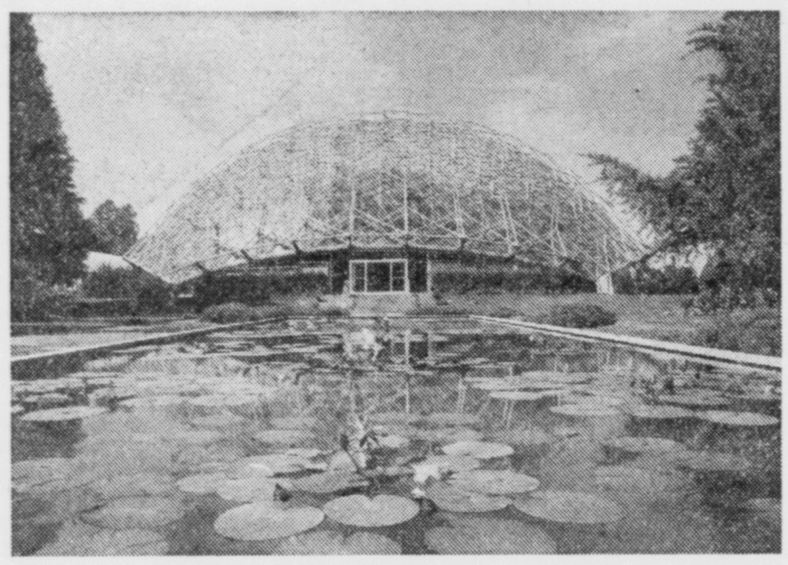
NO MATTER who's about to slumber, this comfortable bedroom should support the body in style. The decorating evolves around one good fabric/wall covering team, called Waverly by Greef, in aqua, sand and coral.

Botanical garden charms plant lover



Mary B. Good

Potting shed

What do you do in a Garden of Eden surrounded by 250,000 specimens representing every major plant family on earth? If you're a plant buff, you freak out!

That's what happens when people visit the 79-acre Missouri Botanical Garden in St. Louis.

Earlier this month, garden writers from all over the country converged on the gardens, grooving on the Climatron, a $1 million geodesic dome, which was the first climate-controlled greenhouse of its type in the world.

Between 1,200 and 1,500 exotic plants of the jungle tropics are nestled in the Climatron, including bird of paradise, papaya, banana, hibiscus, coffee and an interesting tree called Pharaoh's Fig, whose for-fun handle is "the dandruff tree." The flaky epidermis of this goodie is irresistible to the touch, like Charmin tissue, because it's hard to keep one's hands off of it.

A ONE-HUMP geodesic dome means you're in St. Louis, a three humper, Milwaukee's Whitnall Park conservatories. The Missour Botanical Garden for all seasons is a St. Louis landmark, as much as its Big Arch.

WHEN I TOUCHED the trunk of this inviting specimen — which seemed to scream "feel me" — the flaky stuff rubbed off like dandruff. Of course, this does not hurt the tree, because the amount that comes off with a little pat is not a big deal. Also, there are no signs informing people about the unique character of the curious trunk, so relatively few bother it. This tree, however, rewarded me for stroking its trunk by dropping a fig pod on my head, which I hope to grow, if possible, into a baby dandruff tree.

A calm tropical pond reveals the presence of an aquatunnel on the lower level where visitors in the Climatron get an underwater tour of finny creatures swimming around in aqualand. With a little fantasizing, one gets the feeling of being a scuba diver.

IF YOU LIKE bizarre life forms, the Missouri Botanical Garden offers a desert house; for people who can't afford a trip to Egypt, Turkey, Greece or other far off ports, there is a Mediterranean house.

For lovers of the Orient, a $1.2 million dollar Japanese garden depicts ancient landscape style, seldom if ever seen on such a scale in this country.

The overwhelming compulsion to steal slips from plants must have been anticipated, because the Garden maintains a plant shop where visitors may browse among the many plants for sale at modest prices. Oh, if I only had been born an octopus to carry home my botanical lusts!

St. Louisans affectionately call the Missouri Botanical Garden "Shaw's Garden" because of its founder, English-born Henry Shaw, a St. Louis hardware businessman who amassed a personal fortune which allowed him the luxury of retiring by age 40 — in 1849.

Shaw's Garden includes an English woodland area, an herbarium and a scented garden for the blind, where selections are planted to appeal to the sense of touch, smell and taste.

Should you get the opportunity to get down to St. Louis on a vacation (about a six-hour drive from Chicago), put the Missouri Botannical Garden on your list of floral "must-sees." In addition to being an internationally acclaimed botanical research center, here is one of those floral paradises that attract garden scientists and casual beauty-lovers alike — a real "trip."

Women and health

by CATHERINE S. CHILMAN, Ph.D.

(Third in a series)

MILWAUKEE — The current push for equality between the sexes gives women many new opportunities, but it may also increase the stress they feel.

The multiple demands of family, home and job create new problems such as finding reliable child care and seeing that the house work gets done along with job responsibilities. As a result many signs of stress appear: irritability, depression, tension, quarrels, gloomy silences and even physical illness.

Difficult as it may seem, the first step is to face these problems openly. Married women will need to talk candidly with their husbands. This is not always easy because many men find it uncomfortable to talk about problems within the family.

NO MATTER how angry, worried or depressed you may be, it is best to try calmly to analzyze the situation together, with the goal of increasing understanding on both sides and listening to each other. In this way you may be able to develop a plan for the work that can be shared by all members of the family, with clear and appropriate assignments for each member.

If you have children, they should be consulted, too. Perhaps you and your husband will need to make adjustments in your jobs and daily schedules, or perhaps you can get a part or full-time housekeeper to help maintain family equilibrium.

Divorce and separation rates are so high today that many women find themselves as single heads of families. Work overload can be particularly stressful in these conditions. Discuss your feelings with a trusted friend.

WHERE APPROPRIATE, explain your situation to your employer, who may be far more understanding than you imagine. Just expressing yourself can reduce stress and allow others to understand your problems, opening the way for new ideas about how to handle them.

On the other hand, half of the women in the country do not have jobs outside the home. Many are content being full-time mothers and homemakers. If you are one of these women, you should resist pressure to enter the labor market against your wishes, for there are many values in giving yourself wholeheartedly to your family, home and community.

Another widespread, stress-related phenomenon among women is depression. The causes of depression are quite varied. In some cases depression may have its roots in loneliness. In others, it is the fact that women have been brought up to be passive and unaccustomed to making the big decisions in their lives. Sometimes the combined pressures of job plus housekeeping may bring on a depressed emotional state.

JUST TALKING things over, therefore, may not be the answer. Under stress, some people become hyperactive and get even more tense and exhausted. Others tend to become overwhelmed and unable to cope with their lives.

If you find yourself tense and exhausted much of the time, you ought to have a thorough physical examination. Discuss with your physician whether you might also benefit from help from a professional trained counselor, such as a family counselor, psychologist or psychiatrist.

Far too many people turn to drugs and alcohol to alleviate stress. Unless drugs are taken on the advice and with the supervision of a physician, this is usually not a good idea. Drugs, like alcohol, may be dangerously habit-forming and cover up, rather than solve, the basic problems which cause stress.

SO MUCH EMPHASIS today is placed on achievement, on individual rights and on material goods that we are in danger of losing sight of the fact that loving relationships are fundamental to our lives. Love requires sharing the joys and griefs that others feel, as well as our own.

A full, loving partnership is becoming more and more possible in these days of equality between the sexes. And such a partnership, for those who can achieve it is a great healer of stress.

The doctor says

Housewife fatigue is common problem

A few years ago if a housewife went to a doctor and was depressed or worn out and tired he would prescribe some pills and send her home. My doctor called them energy pills, now known on the street as "speed."

If you go to a doctor now and ask for them he looks at you like you are a drug addict or a drug pusher. I haven't taken anything like that for about four years.

I am so depressed and discouraged about everything. I don't even want my kids. I don't have the energy to take care of them. I'm sure there are a lot of housewives and mothers who have the same problem and don't know who to talk to about it. Maybe you could print something that would help millions of women on what to do about depression.

I might add, when I took those pills I was a beautiful person and loved my family. I loved to keep house and fix meals. Lately it's been such a chore I just throw anything on the table.

Your letter doesn't sound like an individual who has a real depression or a major psychiatric problem. Depression runs the spectrum from a simple mood depression to a psychotic depression that requires immediate professional treatment.

You sound like many women who have run short of energy. It's true that those "pep pills" put some go in people and many liked the elevated mood they obtained from them. One prominent physician who gave them to his swinging patients, some rather prominent nationally and internationally, became known as Dr. Feelgood. And you are right — the medical profession and society frowns on this practice.

Such medicines often cause complications you wouldn't think about, including a number of psychotic reactions at worst and more often loss of normal good judgment.

The feeling of fatigue or lack of energy on the down side of the mood swings that people have is very common. In about 80 per cent of the instances it is not associated with a medical disease, but the first step is to be sure you are not one of the 20 per cent who have a medical problem that needs attention. This can be anything from a serious illness, as anemia, or a simple matter of poor nutrition. That is why you need a medical checkup.

Often psychological factors play a big role. That means you can do something about it yourself. Goals, opportunities to do something you really like, a change in scenery are all important factors. New responsibilities often help stimulate a person and provide a new sense of thrust or energy.

A number of habits can sap your energy too. These include cigaret smoking, obesity and lack of physical exercise. Just being occupied with unstimulating multiple light chores is not adequate physical activity. Most women need something more — such as tennis if they like it or some other sport they enjoy. Regular exercise helps to keep your body fit and gives you an increased sense of energy.

Cat difficult to break from scratching habit

Dear Roberta: Our present cat has a lovely disposition, but it's rather destructive. It's wearing out places in the rugs by using them to scratch on instead of the scratching post our other cats used. What should we do?—Rita Lombardo

It's a tough situation, experts say. The answer depends more on your cat than on you. Great individualists always, cats are extremely hard to train and harder to untrain from such habits. It's a natural instinct to sharpen their claws, and they'll keep returning to a place they find satisfactory to fill the need. There are two possible — note, that's a faint possible — solutions to your problem.

Some cats will scratch cardboard. If yours goes for this, be thankful and willing to replace the cardboard frequently. Or, since your cat chooses a flat carpet instead of the more usual vertical upholstered chair leg or sofa side, try giving it a horizontal scratching post. Lay a log with bark on the floor for her. Or nail a piece of rough fabric to a log. Then, show it how to use the log by setting it at the end of the log and drawing its claws over it.

Dear Roberta: There must be a way to squeeze out more brew from coffee grounds. I've tried to eke out a couple of extra cups from a lot of freshly used grounds and also from grounds that've dried out in the oven. Both of these methods have fizzled, producing a niciely colored liquid without good flavor or oomph. What with coffee prices, it would be helpful to use grounds again somehow.—Celie Nelson

I'd love to know how to stretch a can of coffee. Perhaps readers will share their know-how.

Dear Roberta: Chickens are easily stacked one on top of another in the freezer, if you cut them into parts and rewrap them.—Alan Wise.

Energy Savers: Put on weatherstripping to stop heat from escaping and cold from entering through gaps around windows and doors. And don't forget the garage, especially if it's attached to the house.

Mrs. Mathews welcomes questions and hints. If a personal reply is required, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Write to her in care of Suburban Living, The Daily Herald, Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill., 60006.

Weddings

Debra Ann Apking–Michael Edward Hemstock

A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the Sept. 24 wedding of Debra Ann Apking and Michael Edward Hemstock in Prince of Peace Lutheran Church, Hoffman Estates.

The bride, a graduate of Conant High School and Palatine School of Beauty Culture, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Apking, Hoffman Estates. The groom, who attended Fremd High and has been living in Roselle, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Hemstock, Ishpeming, Mich.

For the double ring ceremony, Debra wore an ivory voile gown with Chantilly lace accents and her Camelot headpiece, trimmed in pearls, held a fingertip veil. She carried rust-tipped white carnations, roses and baby's breath.

TERRI LEE APKING was her sister's maid of honor in a spice colored gown, and she carried daisies tipped with butterscotch and rust. Identically attired was another sister, Susan Lynn, Itasca, who was bridesmaid.

Joseph Hemstock, brother of the groom, was best man and ushers were William Jaeger, Wheaton, and Gene Skamara, Addison.

Debra works for Rainy Day People Hairdressers, Schaumburg, and Michael for B&A Enterprises Ltd., Villa Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Michael Hemstock

Debora Van Haften–Terence Towey

Debora Lee Van Haften and Terence Thomas Towey might never have met if it weren't for the fact that he works with her father at Colonial Chevrolet in Schaumburg.

Debbie is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Van Haften, Arlington Heights, and Terry is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Towey, Buffalo Grove. They were married Sept. 17 in a 3 p.m. double ring ceremony at St. Edna's Church, Arlington Heights.

The bride wore a white satin gown with ruffled train anl a Juliet veil secured by a beaded, lace headpiece. She carried a cascade of orchids, white stephanotis and ivy.

AS MAID OF honor, Barbara Mueller, Schaumburg, was attired in a peach chiffon gown with matching sun hat. She carried peach and white glamellias with ivy. The groom's attendants were William Samp, Des Plaines, as best man, and the bride's brother, James, and Michael Seveska, Rolling Mealows, as groomsmen.

The wedding was followed by a dinner reception at The Lancer Steak House restaurant, Schaumburg. Venice, Fla. was the destination of the newlyweds for their one-week honeymoon.

Debora, a 1975 graduate of Hersey High Scool, works for Union Oil Co. of California, in Schaumburg. Terence graduated from Maine West High in 1975.

Mr. and Mrs. Terence Towey

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Schoepp

Cynthia Ann Haich–Ross Schoepp

Little did Cynthia Ann Haich know that the boy who crashed her 16th birthday party one day would be her husband. She and Ross Schoepp, son of Mr. and Mrs. Burton Schoepp, Des Plaines, were married at 4 p.m. Sept. 3 at Queen of the Rosary Church in Elk Grove Village.

Cynthia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Haich, Elk Grove, chose her sister, Ann, as maid of honor, with another sister, Edith Haich Bianchi of Chicago, as bridesmaid along with Ruth West of Michigan and the groom's sister. Cyndee. Cynthia's cousins, Lisa McKinly, 3, and Ronnie Jesse, 4, were flower girl and ring bearer, respectively.

BEST MAN WAS Ross' brother, Bruce. His brother, Bradley, Mount Prospect; the bride's brother Dana, McHenry; and Joe Lockey, Des Plaines, were groomsmen.

At the reception at I.A.M. World Air Capitol Lodge No. 1487, Des Plaines, 220 guests toasted the bride and groom before they began their week's honeymoon in the Ozarks.

Cynthia and Ross live in Des Plaines. A 1973 graduate of Elk Grove High School, the new Mrs. Schoepp works for Quadra Ltd., Elk Grove. Ross is a 1972 graduate of Elk Grove High, and also graduated from Harper College. He is employed at the Santa Fe Railroad, Chicago.

Jeanne Louise Valentine–Darrell Robert Splithoff

After an eight-day honeymoon in Hawaii, Darrell Robert Splithoff and his bride, the former Jeanne Louise Valentine, are residing in their new home in Northfield. Married Sept. 24 in Alice Millar Chapel at Northwestern University, Jeanne is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Valentine, Cincinnati, Ohio, and Darrell is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Splithoff, Arlington Heights.

Jeanne and Darrell are graduates of Northwestern, Jeanne in '73 and Darrell in '71. In 1975 Darrell also received his graduate degree from Northwestern. He is with Booz, Allan & Hamilton, Chicago consultant firm, and Jeanne is with Becker Securities, Chicago.

CAROL LYN Valentine was her sister's maid of honor for the 4 p.m. double ring service, and the groom's sisters, Patricia Myers, Mount Prospect, and Karen, were bridesmaids along with Cheryl Wells, Chicago, and Maggie Tobergte, Pensacola, Fla.

Best man was Brian Kelley, Hinsdale, and ushers were Glen Fellman, Washington, D.C., the groom's brother-in-law Jack Myers, Larry Petrillo, Arlington Heights, and the bride's brothers, Fritz and Chris.

AAUW conference Oct. 29 at Harper

Arlington Heights Area Branch of the American Assn. of University Women will host the AAUW District Five Conference from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Oct. 29 at Harper College.

The keynote speech, "Women, You Can Do It," will be given by Kris Howard of the National Girl Scout Board. There will be a panel of District Five branch leaders discussing this past summer's national convention, along with talks by Donnie Calvin, Illinois State Division president and Eunice Roller, first vice president.

Also during the day's activities will be several workshops, including one on woman power, another on successful programming, and a dual workshop aimed at individual branch members.

Those not already registered for the conference should contact Marilyn Bogen, 358-7374, or Jeane Lindeke, 358-8350.

Diane Mermigas

Last season for 'Saturday Night Live'

Enjoy the zany, unpredictability of NBC's "Saturday Night Live" while you can, because it won't be around next season.

To make matters worse, you won't be able to see Gilda Radner, Dan Aykroyd or any of the other Not Ready For Prime Time Players uncensored and incomparable tonight because of a special the network airs at 10:30 p.m. on Channel 5 called "The Great American Laugh-off."

"The Great American Laugh-off," which features Nancy Bleiweiss, others of the new "Laugh-in" cast and graduates of Chicago's Second City comedy troupe, is supposed to be a 90-minute parade of never-before-seen comedy acts.

THE SHOW also has been pegged as a possible replacement for Saturday Night Live" after this season.

Some people believe such a move is just like laughing at someone's funeral.

Here is Saturday Night Live," an innovative, creative late-night show with a cult-like following and consistently high ratings, suffering a slow, natural death in its third season.

And there are the NBC programming executives, not even giving the show that blazed new trails a respectable, proper farewell before it tries out possible replacements on the fourth Saturday night of each month when Saturday Night Live" generally takes a breather.

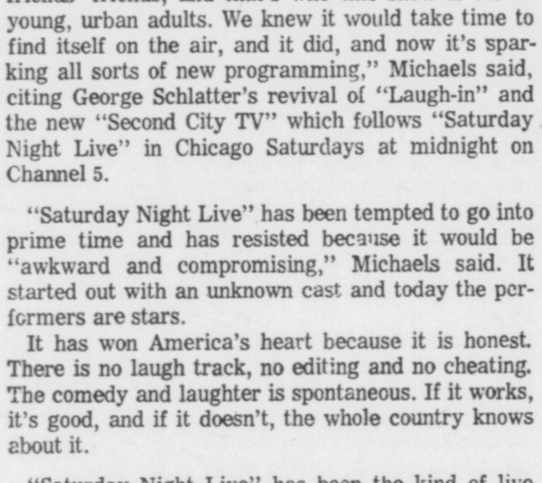
The network could argue that it's the only way to do business — that it has to hustle to come up with something as successful as "Saturday Night Live" has been.

BUT, NOT even the show's writers and cast feel that way about tonight's experimental airing.

"The cast and the writers of our show are very upset about it and I think it's callous of NBC to do it. It's really an insensitive move by the network," said Lorne Michaels, producer and creator of "Saturday Night Live."

"It would have been nicer if they would have tried out this show somewhere else, either in prime time or in place of the Friday night 'Midnight Special.' All of us have to deal with our own indispensibility, but this just isn't a nice gesture towards us," he said.

Despite the agitation, the "Saturday Night Live" crew and NBC officials see eye to eye when it comes to one thing: that it's going to be tough, if not impossible, to replace the 90-minute show that brings audio-visual relief and hope to millions each week. The show makes Saturday night more than just a date night and has offered America an answer to Britain's Monty Python.



THE "SATURDAY NIGHT LIVE" CONE HEADS

"I LOVED THE show then and I love it now, even though it isn't the same show anymore," he said. "I thought it would be easy to write a show for your friends' friends, and that's who this show is for — young, urban adults. We knew it would take time to find itself on the air, and it did, and now it's sparking all sorts of new programming," Michaels said, citing George Schlatter's revival of "Laugh-in" and the new "Second City TV" which follows "Saturday Night Live" in Chicago Saturdays at midnight on Channel 5.

"Saturday Night Live" has been tempted to go into prime time and has resisted because it would be "awkward and compromising," Michaels said. It started out with an unknown cast and today the performers are stars.

It has won America's heart because it is honest. There is no laugh track, no editing and no cheating. The comedy and laughter is spontaneous. If it works, it's good, and if it doesn't, the whole country knows about it.

"Saturday Night Live" has been the kind of live programming that is risky and exciting, and "definitely a show for a particular generation," Michaels said.

WHAT OTHER show could have lured consumer advocate Ralph Nader into a glittering cowboy outfit, Georgia Senator Julian Bond in a pitch for hair spray and pro quarterback Fran Tarkenton in a parody of publicr service announcements in New York's NBC studio 8H with a group of masterful looneys in a zoo atmosphere?

Whatever becomes of "Saturday Night Live," Michaels, the writers and the Not Ready for Prime Time Players who gave us such gleeful creations as Barbara Wawa and the Cone Heads, one thing's for sure: Saturday nights just won't be the same without them all.

TV NOTES:

Channel 5 anchorman Ron Hunter begins his new weekday interview show at 1 a.m. Monday to be repeated at 6 a.m. each day. His guests will be Henry Winkler, Phil Donahue and comic Wayland Flowers.

TV HIGHLIGHTS:

• Faye Dunaway and Dustin Hoffman stars as a 121-year-old man who recalls his remarkable days with the Indians and in "Little Big Man" Saturday at 7 p.m. on Channel 5.

• Newspaper movie critics Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert begin a new season of movie reviews in "Sneak Previews" Saturday at 7 p.m. on Channel 11.

• Theodore Timrack's dramatized film biography of maverick American composer Charles Ives, "Ives: A Good Dissonance Like a Man," airs Saturday at 8 p.m. on Channel 11.

• Demond Wilson, formerly of "Sandford and Son," stars as a breadwinner who returns to his family after seven years in "Baby, I'm Back," a pilot for a possible series Saturday at 8:30 p.m. on Channel 2.

• Two Saturday kid's shows: "Davy Crockett on the Mississippi" is an animated special based on the legendary exploits of the frontier hero at noon on Channel 2 and "The Ransom of Red Chief" is the O. Henry classic about kidnappers who ruefully learn about kid power at 11 a.m. on Channel 7.

• Sunday televiion is chock full of specials beginning at 6 p.m. on Channel 7 with a star-studded celebration of Marie Osmond's 18th birthday.

• ABC continues the festival fare at 7 p.m. with two hours of high class entertainment in "Happy Birthday, Las Vegas" and wraps it all up at 9 p.m. on Channel 7 with what looks to be a very funny "Gabriel Kaplan Presents the Smali Event" special.

• NBC competes against ABC's power-packed trilogy with "NBC: The First Fifty Years — A Closer Look," a two and a half hour special that looks at the best of TV's early days begi ning at 7:30 p.m. on Channel 5.

DUSTIN HOFFMAN in "LITTLE BIG MAN"

"THIS WILL BE the last season for the show," Michaels confirmed in an exclusive interview.

"It's the third and last season because 18 hours a day and six days of work a week is just too much. We have to write 90 minutes worth of script in two days, then rewrite it in three and the sets arrive all the while we're rehearsing," he said.

"Because the show is done live September to May the scripts can't be written in advance and the 60 some people who work on the show have to be here all the time. It means you have no life outside the show," Michaels said.

"There comes a point where you say I've done 70 shows in three years at just an unrelenting pace. There is just enormous pressure and after a while you wonder what more you can do in this vehicle even though you have marvelous writers and a marvelous cast," he said.

Michaels, who only agreed to three seasons of the show, says he hopes to create something else new and different for television within the next year, although he's not sure what just.

As for the seven Not Ready For Prime Time Players, they may remain together as a comedy troupe in a different vehicle, he said.

"There's not a person in the group who isn't a star in his or her own right, and yet there is enormous strength in the unity of a group like ours. No one person, including myself, is greater than the show," Michaels said, pointing to the exit of Chevy Chase from the group after the show's first season for what turned out to be a rather unsuccessful attempt at solo stardom.

"AND, THEN AGAIN, who knows. All of the cast could go off on their own to star in their own shows. Each of them has received offers to do other things, and they are all very capable. I'm sure the network would make certain that each one had the proper platform for the talent they have if the group broke up," Michaels said.

"It's really hard to say just what will happen at this point since everyone is just concentrating on today and will worry about tomorrow when we get there," he said.

Michaels firmly believes that the Not Ready For Prime Time Players aren't out of the picture yet. The network just may come up with a new show for the group.

And he is certain that NBC will allow the same creative freedom and backing that the network showed him three years ago when, after working with greats like Lily Tomlin and almost dropping out of television work because of frustration, he blueprinted and launched "Saturday Night Live."

Italian artists highlight Carson's fall import show

During Carson Pirie Scott & Co's fall import fair. "Italy: The Romance and the Reality," several Italian guests will demonstrate their talents at the Randhurst store in Mount Prospect.

The fair will be a showcoase of artisans, exhibits, designers, specially merchandised shops, and entertainment reflecting the romantic traditions and contemporary reality that is Italy in 1977. At the State Street store it runs from Oct. 31 to Nov. 12.

At Carson's Rqndhurst store, a mosaic maker, Fei Ascanio, will appear Nov. 2 from 7 to 9 p.m. His demonstration will feature the inlaying of small, colored glass pieces into decorative mosaic patterns.

Vincenzo Grillo will demonstrate cameo carving 7 to 9 p.m. Nov. 9, at Randhurst. Traditional cameo designs will take shape as conch shells are carved, oiled and polished during his show.

Representing a distringuished furniture resource in Milan, Alberto Fumagalli will demonstrate the process of carving and assembling six arm chairs 7 to 9 p.m., Nov. 10, at Carson's Randhurst. The legs of the chairs will be carved in a palm-leaf pattern.

Winding up the Randhurst appearances, four Venetian gondoliers will blend their voices, guitars and accordians to create the aura of Italy throughout Carson's store from 7 to 9 p.m. Nov. 11.

Major & Minors at Embers one night

Dave Major & the Minors, a musical quintent appearing regularly on the nightclub circuit, will perform at 8 p.m. Wednesday at The Embers Restaurant, Rte. 20 east of Elgin.

Win at bridge

North wins 'golden' award

We have just decided to establish a "Jacoby Silence is Golden" award to that bridge player who remains silent under the greatest provocation.

West held the first trick with the jack of hearts and promptly shifted to a low trump.

South won in his hand and led a second heart. Back came a second trump and South had to lose a third heart and a club.

"What could I have done?" complained South. "The defense was too good."

North could have said any number of things starting with the mild suggestion that South would have made his contract. If he had led a small club and played low from dummy instead of that heart, all the defense could do would be to cash a second heart to keep South from making an overtrick.

Or North could have said something stronger such as "Play bridge!" or maybe "Use your brain, if you have one."

In any event North merely said, "Deal" and gets our award.

Ask Andy

More than 80 nations have the 4-H Clubs

HOW DID THE 4-H CLUBS BEGIN?

Young people between the ages of 9 and 19 may join community groups called 4-H. The motto of the organization is "Make the Best Better." And here's their pledge: "I pledge my Head to clear thinking, my Heart to greater loyalty, my Hands to larger service, and my Health to better living, for my club, my community, my country and my world."

More than 80 countries have 4-H clubs. There are 5.5 million young people in the organization in the United States and about 75,000 in Canada.

The 4-H clubs are organizations that help youngsters learn useful skills, serve their communities and have fun together. Members have no special uniforms but wear a clover with four leaves, each printed with the letter H. The letters stand for Head, Heart, Hands and Health.

Every 4-H member carries out at least one project each year. Originally, most members were rural youngsters, and the projects dealt with livestock, crops, farm machinery, forestry or marketing. City members can take on projects dealing with clothing, food, home improvements, photography or woodworking.

The 4-H movements started in the late 1890s. A naturalist at Cornell University named Liberty Hyde Bailey had started publishing nature study leaflets in 1896. Educators in a number of states used the leaflets to help teach farm children useful skills.

In 1902 a township school superintendent named A. B. Graham in Ohio began the first club that is much like today's 4-H organizations. Regular meetings were held and members worked on projects dealing with corn, other vegetables and soil testing. And in the same year, a county school superintendent named O. J. Kern started a club in Winnebago County in Illinois. During the early 1900s, the clubs boomed across North America.

Clubs in Iowa came up with the green clover emblem with white H's in 1910. Then, during the early 1920s, agricultural clubs throughout the United States officially adopted the 4-H emblem and the name 4-H Club.

The first Canadian club began in 1913 but it was not officially organized nationally until 1931, and the 4-H name wasn't adopted until 1952.

Andy sends the 1977 World Book Science Year Annual to Kerri Lynne Lunt, 14, of Sandy, Utah, for her question:

WHAT IS A NEWT?

A newt is a type of salamander that is classified as an amphibian, along with his cousin the frog. He hatches from an egg which is laid singly each spring on the leaves of plants underwater. The baby newt hatches in three to five weeks and lives the first part of his life underwater, breathing by means of gills.

Best-known newt in North America is the red-spotted newt. It's about four inches long, has four weak legs, thin skin and a slender body. He loves insects and worms.

A newt will develop lungs and usually take to the land as he gets older. Often he will stay on land for three years before returning to the water to breed. He often sheds his skin and can even grow a new leg if he happens to lose one.

Send your question on a post card to Ask Andy in care of The Daily Herald, P.O. Box 280, Arlington Heights, Illinois 60006, making sure to include your name, age and address. Entries are open to boys and girls 7 to 17.

Elk Grove topples Prospect to clinch title

by KEITH REINHARD

Moses may have parted the waters but Don Schnake doesn't go for that razzle dazzle kind of performance.

So the veteran Elk Grove helmsman just had his charges wade through the sea of dark blue Prospect jerseys confronting them Friday night.

On the other side was a 21-7 victory for the Grenadiers ruining Prospect's unblemished slate and officially nailing the lid on his school's fifth South Division championship in six years.

SCHNAKE'S CHIEF diciples Friday were a pair of hard-nosed running backs named Jack Walsh and Jim Meyer. Between them, they lugged the ball on more than 50 occasions and Walsh hit paydirt three times as the Grens pounded out their fifth divisional win in a row.

Even if Elk Grove, 6-1 over-all, should lose their final South circuit contest next week to Hoffman Estates, they will win their second straight title.

The usually low-key Schnake expressed surprise at the way his offense was able to control the contest early.

"I never really know what to expect and tonight was no exception," the Gren coach said. "We always try to establish a running game and I knew that would be especially important against Prospect because that would give them less opportunity to handle the ball and I was very apprehensive about their passing game."

SCHNAKE'S apprehensions were realized on the game's first play from scrimmage when Knight quarterback Andy Loos unleashed a 45-yard pass to Dave LaCosse.

Elk Grove's defense dug in moments later, however, and Walsh and Meyer soon were off on a 73-yard scoring excursion that Walsh capped on the 15th play by bulldozing three yards up the middle.

Prospect toughened up after that and neither side made much headway until late in the second quarter on a long-yardage situation. Grove signal caller Ralph Souder flipped a pass to his favorite receiver, Mark Angellotti, who scampered down to Prospects one-yard line for a 25-yard gain.

A penalty moved the ball back to the six but Walsh promptly pounded off left tackle for his second touchdown and a 14-0 halftime Elk Grove lead.

IN THE THIRD period the Grenadiers put the game on ice quickly, taking the opening kickoff and marching 60 yards in 16 plays. Walsh took it in from the one and Dave Sargent booted his third extra point for a 21-0 advantage.

The Knights got on the board later in the third quarter when Loos connected on a 15-yard pass to Mark Dahle, a 28 yarder to Randy McBride and finally an eight-yard TD pitch to LaCosse. It turned out to be too little, too late as both sides turned miserly on defense in the final quarter.

"It just wasn't our night," Prospect coach Gary Grouwinkel said. "They're a real fine ball club and they play the kind of game that doesn't afford you much of an opportunity to come from behind."

"I thought that one pass they completed late in the first half was probably the key play of the game," Grouwinkel said. "If we had stopped them there it could have easily been a 7-0 game at halftime and things may have developed differently. Our kids played exceptionally well in the second half."

Meyer rushed for more than 100 yards and Walsh wound up with 92 as the Grens outgained their hosts 217-64 on the ground and earned a 17-9 edge in first downs.

Prospect notched more than 100 yards in the air.

GREN GAIN. Elk Grove receiver Mark Angellotti dances over a Prospect tackler en route to the Knight one-yard line during the first half of the Grenadier showdown at Prospect Friday night. It was the only complete Gren pass of the game but the 25-yarder thrown by Ralph Souder set up Elk Grove's second touchdown to aid a 21-7 victory. Mike Skoog (64) brought Angellotti down.

Palatine defense stands tough against Arlington

by ART MUGALIAN

It wasn't exactly one of those games played between the 40-yard-lines. As a matter of fact, Palatine's 7-6 victory over Arlington was decided between the one-yard-line and the Palatine goal Friday night.

Sure, the winning touchdown came on an incredible second-quarter catch in the end zone by Palatine flanker John Comerford of an equally incredible 33-yard pass from quarterback Craig Long.

And, of course, the winning pont was the result of Pirate booter Mike Mikulan's perfect conversion with 6:53 still left in the first half.

BUT THE BIG play — the one that turned Arlington's umpteenth homecoming celebration into a nightmare — was an abortive two-point try in the third period after the Cardinals had scored what could have been the tying TD on a five-yard run by Greg Sabatello.

Arlington had taken advantage of a Palatine fumble at the top of the second half, moving the ball from the enemy 39 to paydirt in nine plays, all on the ground. Card kicker Bill Hajek and the special team lined up for the conversion, but a Palatine offside penalty put the ball on the 1½-yard line and Arlington coach Chuck Haines changed plans.

Out came the regular offensive unit to run one of Haines' favorite plays — the option keeper with QB Chuck Klein running the ball. Klein, though, had nowhere to go, running into a stone wall of Pirate tacklers just short of the goal line.

"Our entire middle of the line made the play on that one," said Palatine coach Arv Herstedt. "They were all in on it — (Chuck) Schira, (Mike) Johnson, (Brian) Bertoia. Actually, I'm surprised they didn't make it. If I were in their position I would have tried the same thing."

HAINES REFUSED to be second-guessed on his decision. "Sure we're going for two there," said Haines, whose Cards, now 2-2 in the MSL North, fell out of contention for the division title. "We thought we'd score again. Heck, we were pushing them all over the field except across the goal line."

Arlington turned the ball over on downs twice in the first half — once at the Pirate 13-yard-line. Another time, Palatine's Tom Petersen intercepted a Klein pass at the six after the Cards penetrated inside the 15.

"I though our kids played well together," said Herstedt. "They played excellent defense, especially (Gordie) Anderson and (Gary) Batke. It just shows that they don't give up. It was hard to come back after getting pasted (41-7) last week by Barrington."

Batke picked off a pass late in the third quarter to shut off a Cardinal drive that had started to gain momentum on the running of Klein and Sabatello. Anderson, a 5-10, 167-pound defensive end, pursued and flattened Klein from behind when the Card QB tried to scramble for a first down with time running out in the game.

"Klein is real tough," said Herstedt. "He hurt us with the roll-out and the sprint-out. But we didn't fall apart, we kept our poise."

THE WINNING TD pass from Long to Comerford came after the duo had hooked up for a key four-yard completion on fourth down just a moment before. Long had set up that series with a nifty 27-yard strike to Mikulan.

"I thought Long could have run it," Herstedt said with a smile.

How about those undefeated Bulls

by DON FRISKE

For three quarters and most of a fourth Friday night, the Indiana Pacers proved to be a defensive challenge for the Bulls.

But the home team prevailed in the closing minutes as the Bulls won their Chicago Stadium debut, 122-119, against a Pacer team that could not find the basket near the end.

Indiana used hot shooting to build sizable leads three different times, the last being the biggest. With only six minutes left in the game, the Pacers owned a 113-103 advantage.

BUT SHOOTING, their most powerful weapon, turned its back on them in the closing minutes while the Bulls put on an offensive surge of their own.

"You can't really adjust to an offense like that," said guard Norm Van Lier, the brightest spark during the Bulls' comeback. "You just have to keep digging in.

"Then they start to get tired and start missing the shots they want to hit near the end, and I think that's what happened tonight."

Pacer coach Bobby Leonard had to sit and watch as Van Lier's hypothesis became reality.

"WE GOT a little bit flustered near the end," Leonard said. "We tried to find a hot player but couldn't. When we built that 10-point lead, we really had it going. We were moving the ball real well, then we froze. There was certainly no need to. We got tighter than a drum."

The Bulls did the same. But their tight play came on defense, and it helped them win their third game without a defeat this season. The Bulls have also won 33 of the last 43 games played in the Stadium, and if they beat the Bucks in Milwaukee tonight it will mark the best start in their 12-year history.

All those possibilities and winning streaks were in jeopardy Friday night. Every time the Bulls seemed to have the Pacers figured out, things went bad.

In the second quarter, the Pacers went ahead 63-55 before the Bulls came back to tie the score at 65-65 to close out the first half.

THEN INDIANA led 83-75 midway through the third period before eight straight points gave the Bulls the lead. And in the final quarter it looked like the home team was out of solutions when the Pacers got hot again from the outside to build another big margin.

But a bit of Van Lier hustle got the Bulls back in the game for one last time.

"He came up with the key rebound, the key steal and the key baskets," said Ed Badger about his veteran guard.

Van Lier's biggest achievement came with 1:43 left to play when he drove the lane for a layup while being fouled. He made the free throw to give the Bulls a 119-117 lead they never lost. He also sparked the third-quarter surge when he dove to the floor to pick up a loose ball before converting it into a layup. Those two points pulled the Bulls to within one of the Pacers.

"YOU'VE GOT TO hustle no matter what, win or lose," Van Lier said. "That's what you get paid to do."

The Pacers ended the game with a shooting percentage of 57, just a few points ahead of the Bulls. John Williamson led all scorers with 30 points as teammate Adrian Dantley added 26.

Artis Gilmore's 27 points paced the Bulls, followed by 19 for Mickey Johnson and 18 for Van Lier.

A record home-opening crowd of 14,062 saw the Bulls fall into periodic lapses when shots were too strong and passes too weak. But the finish made all the frustration worthwhile.

"I may not deserve the victory, but I'm gonna take it anyway," Badger said. "We had such a good crowd you want to play a game like that so they come back."

Fremd tied for 2nd in state golf

SPRINGFIELD — The Fremd varsity golf team, despite what head coach Len Fiocca called a "somewhat disappointing" round, laid just four strokes off the pace of New Trier East's 304 in the Illinois High School Assn. State tournament here Friday.

"The kids didn't think the course was in very good shape," Fiocca said following the Vikings' 308 team total, which positioned them in a second-place tie with Thornwood upon entering the final 18 holes today.

Viking Don Sullivan is in competition for medalist honors after firing a solid 37-37—74 for sixth place over-all. Jim Bruning chipped in with 35-41—76, Win Bruning contributed 40-39—79, Ron Stanford 41-38—79, Pete Mahr 38-42—80 and Ron Ross 41-43—84. The current meet leader is Edwardsville's Joe Malench who carded a 35-36—71.

For Fremd and Barrington, the season starts today

by ART MUGALIAN

Most high school football teams can be defensed with a minimum of bother. Stop the running game, force them to pass, and reap the benefits. Or just close down the airlanes and stack them up at the line of scrimmage.

Defensing Barrington isn't quite so simple. But, then, Barrington's Broncos aren't exactly your average high school football team. Just ask their first six victims.

THE FREMD VIKINGS, 6-0 themselves, will try to keep from becoming the Broncos' seventh consecutive victim today at 2 p.m. in Barrington. The game, in NFL terms, is a sellout.

"This is definitely the big game for us," said Bronco coach Bill Graham. "It's our homecoming and everything."

It will also be Graham's first shot at career victory No. 100. He has been head coach for 15 seasons.

Of his previous 99 wins, Graham's favorite four are no doubt this year's Mid-Suburban North victories over Hersey, Wheeling, Buffalo Grove and Palatine. Pre-season skeptics questioned Barrington's ability to win consistently in the MSL after switching from the smaller North Suburban.

BUT THE BRONCOS have quieted the doubters by marching out to a very successful debut at the 5A level. Now the unbeaten Vikings, 3-0 in the North, stand in the way of a division title and a playoff berth in the IHSA state-tournament series.

Those same incentives will spur Fremd today. The Vikings are enjoying their best season ever.

"Offensively, nearly everything Barrington does complements their passing game," said Fremd coach Joe Samojedny. "When they don't pass, they run draw plays, which is just one step away from a pass play anyway. They pass about 50 per cent of the time and they run maybe 20 per cent draws and other pass-related running stuff. That means that nearly three-quarters of their offense is based on the pass attack."

The key to Barrington's aerial offense is quarterback Bruce Henricksen, an all-state candidate if there ever was one. Poised, rifle-armed and with a knack for scrambling, Henricksen is the rock on which the Broncos have built their attack. His chief passing target is Eric Shellenback, far and away the MSL's leading receiver.

"We won't be able to shut off Barrington's pass attack completely," admitted Samojedny. "But we would like to take away their ability to set up for those passes 30 and 40 yards downfield."

FREMD'S PASS-RUSH, then, will be vital. At the same time, the Viking defense must guard against the draw, which is executed to perfection by tailback Steve Edwards, the league's leading scorer.

Fremd underwent an acid-test of sorts last Friday against Forest View, a team that, like Barrington, throws just about everything at their opponents. The Vikes won, 14-10, despite giving up 162 yards through the air and yielding a total of 12 Falcon first downs.

"If we learned anything from the Forest View game," said Samojedny, "we learned how to defense a big-play offense. That's by holding onto the ball ourselves."

The Viking keys to Samojedny's best-defense-is-a-strong-offense theory are Kevin Weaver and Brian Cromie. Weaver is the league's top rusher, with a new Fremd record of 805 yards. Forest View held him to just 96 yards Friday while Cromie ran for 50 tough yards, including a touchdown, in 17 carries.

"That's the only thing that really worries me," said Barrington's Graham. "I'm worried that we won't be able to get our hands on the ball."

Graham recalled his team's biggest scare of the season, a narrow 15-14 victory over winless Hersey. In that game, Hersey controlled the ball for almost the entire second half and came within three years of punching over the winning TD in the final seconds.

Graham is still having nightmares about that one.

Fremd's toughest opponent so far may have been Wheeling. In that game, the Vikings showed a weakness on pass defense and trailed at halftime. But an injury to the Wheeling quarterback, coupled with a bizarre 85-yard Fremd TD run after a poor Vike punt snap, turned the contest around.

Conant's win gets raves from the critics

by BOB GALLAS

If the act of Pugliese and Walston never makes it to Broadway, it won't be because they didn't rehearse.

If anyone had bothered to show up at 5 p.m. for Conant's 8 p.m. game at Rolling Meadows Friday night, they would have seen Conant quarterback Rocky Pugliese throwing practice passes to receiver Mike Walston.

Four hours later, the two put the act onstage for real, as Pugliese hit Walston on a 66-yard bomb midway through the second quarter to give the Cougars a 15-8 lead they never surrendered as they went on to win 30-14.

But despite the win, Conant was eliminated from the Mid-Suburban League South Division title chase. Elk Grove, which is undefeated in league play and has already beaten Conant, clinched the title with a win over Prospect Friday.

THE BOMB CAME after Pugliese had shaken off a sure tackle seven yards. behind the line of scrimmage to get the pass off. Meadows never quite recovered.

"We had tried that same play earlier and Mike was open but I couldn't get the ball off," explained Pugliese. "We knew it was there next time."

Pugliese and Walston are the heart of the Conant attack and a big reason the school is 5-2 this season and is guaranteed of its first winning campaign since 1969. They play both offense and defense, every play, every game. And if you want to take them out, well, forget it.

"I wouldn't like it on the sidelines," explained Walston, who caught four passes for 113 yards and a touchdown and blocked a late Meadows drive, when the Mustangs trailed by 10, with an interception. He even attempted to kick the final extra point. "Heck, I'll play on the kickoff team, too," he said.

THE 66-YARD touchdown strike offset a drive by Meadows that gave them an 8-7 lead with 5:46 left in the half. The Cougars had taken a 7-0 lead with only 10 seconds gone in the second period, but the Mustangs came right back with a touchdown to cap a 76-yard drive and ran in for the two-point conversion.

The Mustangs kicked off and Conant took over at their own 34-yard line. On the next play, Pugliese hit Walston for a strike heard halfway to Prospect Heights.

"They shows a lot of character, coming back like that after Meadows had swung things around," said Conant coach John Ayres. "The big play is something you have to have to be successful."

Pugliese was 7-for-8 passing for 133 yards and one touchdown. The Conant ground game churned out 163 yards and three touchdowns.

THE MUSTANGS came back from an 18-8 halftime deficit to pull within four, at 18-14, with 9:40 seconds remaining in the third quarter, when quarterback Bill Collis completed his only pass of the night, an eight-yard scoring toss to Kevin Krutwig.

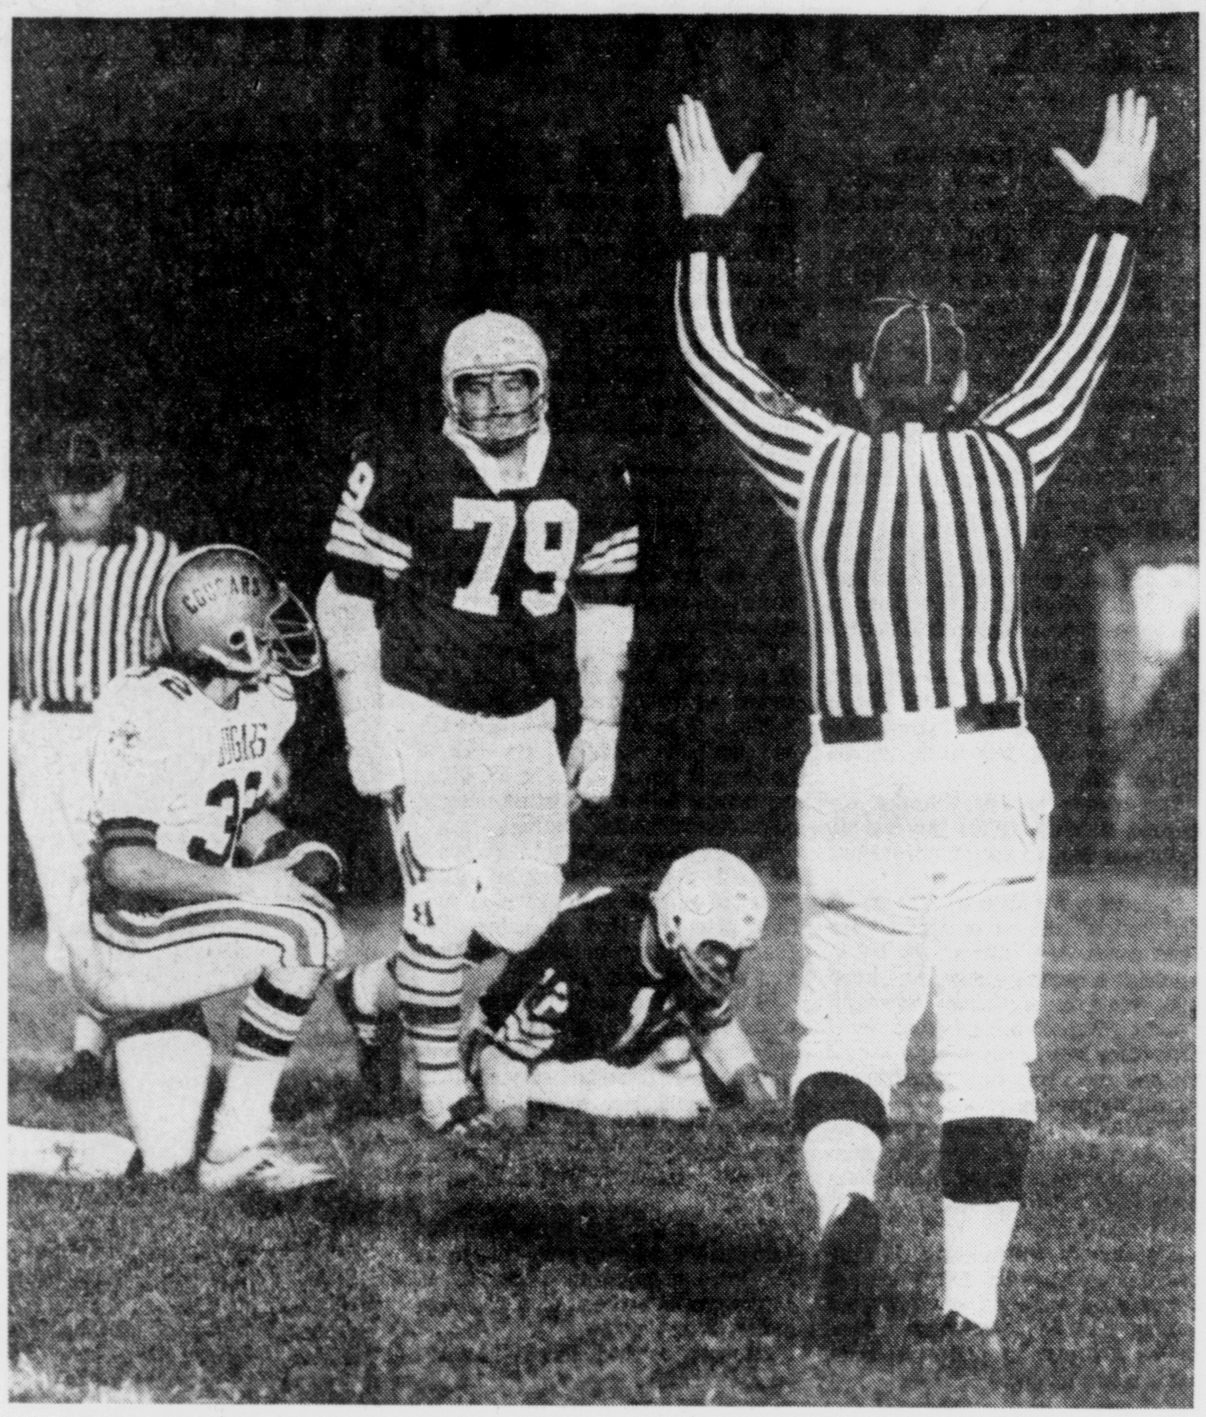
That's the way it stayed until Pugliese popped in from the one-yard line with 8:19 to play to cap a 52-yard drive that started when Meadows fumbled. Conant took a 24-14 lead.

The final Cougar score also followed a Mustang fumble at its own 15-yard line. Three plays later Al Barnhill ran in from the one-foot line that made it 30-14 with 47 seconds to play.

All of Meadows' offense came on the ground, where they pounded out 138 yards, 67 from Bob Gill. Collis was one-for-eight passing for eight yards.

Barnhill led the Cougar rushing attack with 79 yards in 18 carries.

Meadows drops to 3-4 overall, 1-3 in the MSL South.



IT'S TOO LATE. All Mark Nicklas (79) of Rolling Meadows can do is look in helplessly as Tim Tyrrell (32) of Conant starts to get up after scoring on a 4-yard touchdown in first quarter of a 30-14 Conant win Friday.

Mistakes costly in Warrior loss

By VIC NOVAK

Three mistakes. They spelled the difference between victory and defeat for the Maine West Warriors against the Glenbrook South Titans Friday night.

The three Warrior miscues were yielding an 80-yard run, a 35-yard pass, and a 50-yard punt return for touchdowns.

Add some inopportune penalties plus failure to capitalized on scoring opportunities by Maine and the result was Glenbrrok's 21-6 victory. The Central Suburban League South Division setback spoiled Maine's homecoming.

The 80-yard run was the first mistake. With 10:23 remaining in the second period and the Titans facing a first and 10 situation from their 27-yard line, Ed Cramer demonstrated why he entered the game as the league's third leading scorer.

The play was not a fancy one. Cramer took a pitchout, swept the left end and simply outran the rest of the Warrior team to the end zone. Paul Harada's successful extra-point kick gave the visitors a 7-0 lead.

Cramer's score was set up by Warriors' missed opportunities and penalties that ultimately became the game's turning point.

Maine West's Jim Lamberty had intercepted Glenbrook quarterback Steve Vogg's pass and returned it to the South 15-yard line. The Warriors then advanced the ball down to the 10, but were penalized 15 yards for offensive holding on third down. The drive stalled when two passes by West quarterback Ken Quinn fell incomplete.

Glenbrook's other two scores were a fourth quarter 1-2, knockout punch that killed the Warrior victory hopes. Both came within two minutes of each other.

After a scoreless third period, Glenbrook was confronted with second and nine from the Maine West 37-yard line. Vogg spotted teammate Craig Helberg all alone in the Warrior secondary and connected with him for a 35-yard scoring play at the 10:31 mark.

Maine West coach Dan Motier explained Glenbrook caught his Warriors looking for the run, rather than the pass. Since West had shifted to a man-to-man pass defense, Helberg encountered no trouble finding open room in Maine's secondary.

Harada's extra-point kick was good and West trailed, 14-0.

That deficit soon became 20-0 as Maine West could not move the ball following Glenbrook's kickoff. Cramer took the ensuing Warrior punt on his own 50, cut toward the sidelines, angled over the middle of the field and beat everybody else to the Warrior end zone. Harada was perfect again for Glenbrook's 21st point.

Maine West finally made the scoreboard with 1:06 remaining when Dave Jackson capped a 68-yard Warrior scoring march with a two-yard touchdown run.

"We're just too inexperienced," said Mortier. Only four players in West's starting lineup started a year ago.

Four Warrior starters (quarterback Ron Rausch, tailback Randy Smith, Guards Scott Pippen and Scott Speujth) were injured and did not play, and Bob Asian was hurt early in the second half and did not finish.

Viator stuns St. Joseph defense in 48-12 rout

By DARREL KACHAN

St. Viator's John and Dan show once again drew rave reviews before a standing-room only homecoming crowd at Forest View Friday night, but Lions' coach Jim Lyne wasn't concerned about the good notices.

He's wondering what he's going to do for a supporting cast the remainder of the season.

"Every year they (the injuries) seem to get worse," he said. "In the past we've had the depth to fill in, but this year we've got a lot of kids going both ways. We had a lot of injuries, a lot of confusion, but we're happy to take the win."

IF ST. VIATOR was confused, St. Joseph was absolutely bewildered. The Lions shredded the Chargers' paper-mache defense for seven touchdowns on their way to a 48-12 rout. The victory boosts their record to 3-1 in the East Suburban Catholic Conference and 6-1 over-all.

One-half of the Lions' homecoming stars, Dan Schwellenbach, accounted for more than half the Lion six-pointers. The St. Viator fullback opened and closed the scoring with one-yard runs and added 10-yard touchdown bursts in the second and fourth quarters.

"It was a helluva an effort by Dan, though I really don't know if the four touchdowns are a school record," Lyne said. "Dan had some cramps and a charley horse in the third period, but we had to put him back in because there were no backs left."

The Lions also had only one quarterback because their backup signal caller was injured. But with a quarterback such as John Joston, one is more than enough.

JOSTON WAS A master of improvisation against the Chargers, often turning broken plays into long gainers. He led St. Viator's in rushing with 105 yards in 13 carries and completed five of 11 passes for 78 yards. He tallied one touchdown on a 15-yard run and had another called back by a penalty.

The contest was close the first half, even though the Viator offense moved the ball at will. St. Joseph's attack also showed some life, however, and after Schwellenbach's first tally Charger quarterback Tom Tripicchio knotted the score at six on a 30-yard scamper.

Schwellenbach's second score came early in the second frame, and halfback Don Quinnett notched the third Lion touchdown on a 10-yard run. Josten's conversion pass to John Lopez gave Viator a 26-6 lead.

St. Joseph responded with a 69-yard drive near the end of the half. Tripicchio hit Scott Kebby with a 19-yard pass in the corner of the end zone to cap the drive.

THE LIONS' defense, which allowed eight first downs the first half, permitted just one the final two quarters as the game turned into a runaway. Quinnett posted his second touchdown on a one-yard dive for the only score in the third period.

Two touchdowns by Schwellenbach and one by Josten in the final period concluded the festivities. Chris Selvig converted two of four extra-point attempts.

The night was far from a total success for St. Viator, as the Lion injury list continued to grow. Tackle Marc Hayden dislocated his elbow and will be lost for the season. Quinnett was also hampered by cramps, and running back Tony Falduto hurt his ankle.

LION ROARS. St. Viator's Dan Schwellenback drives ahead with three St. Joseph defenders applying the pressure in East Suburban Catholic battle Friday night. Moving in to help out is the Lions' Rick Faul (57). Schwellenbach scored four touchdowns in St. Viator's 48-12 romp. (Photo by Bob Finch)

by LARRY WATTS

Chalk up Hersey's 3-0 overtime victory over Buffalo Grove to experience.

No, the Huskies didn't necessarily have more lettermen on the field than Buffalo Grove. Hersey was just more experienced in overtime games this season.

While the Bison were entering their first sudden death game of the season, it marked the third time the Huskies had gone into overtime. The difference between the two squads was Tom Kreusch's 20-yard field goal, his first of the season.

As the jubilant Huskies rejoiced around Kreusch, Buffalo Grove coach Grant Blaney and his players stood shocked and with their eyes directed to the scoreboard. Blaney has yet to guide the Bison to a victory over Hersey and all four losses have been heartbreakers.

"I'VE GOT ALL of those losses tatooed on my chest," said Blaney as he slowly walked off the field. "We've lost to Hersey in double overtime, by one point and 19-14 last year. It's just like this every time we play each other."

By the way the respective defensive units played, it was difficult to believe the two schools had a combined record of 1-11.

Hersey's greatest penetration during regulation play was the Bison' 34-yard line. Buffalo Grove drove to the Huskies' six-yard line midway through the second period, but Greg Walther's 28-yard field goal attempt was just wide to the left.

Both coaches had high praise for their defenses. Hersey netted 218 yards total offense while Buffalo Grove was held to 139 yards.

"This victory really gives us a big lift," said Hersey coach Joe Gliwa. "When you lose all the close games we have, the boys have a tendency to get down on themselves. This group of boys has deserved a better fate than a 1-6 record."

BOTH TEAMS had opportunities to score in regulation time but came up empty-handed.

Buffalo Grove had a first down on the Huskies eight-yard line in the second period. Running back Greg Bazany ran into his quarterback, Craig Groot, and the play lost six yards. One play later, Chuck Carkhuff dropped a sure touchdown pass in the end zone and the Bison decided to attempt the field goal.

In the fourth period, Hersey's Mike Lococo returned a punt 73 yards for an apparent touchdown, but teammate Mike Iskierski was penalized for an illegal block and the play was brought back.

And Buffalo Grove's overtime possession was not without excitement. Blaney thought his team scored on a pass to Bob Vollman, but the referee ruled that Vollman had trapped the ball. On the next play, Hersey's David Mueller intercepted Groot's pass and raced 95 yards downfield before being caught three yards shy of a touchdown.

"This group of boys is so unpredictable, but at least we'll have a positive outlook going into next week's game," Gliwa said. Hersey takes a 1-3 North Division record into next week's match with Palatine.

As for Blaney, whose team is now 0-5 in North Division play, the show will be on the other foot at Wheeling next week.

"Wheeling has never beaten us, so look for another tough one," said the Bison' coach.

Pistol hits only Nets in leading Jazz to victory

NBA report

Pete Maravich, the NBA's leading scorer last season, scored 41 points Friday night to pace the New Orleans Jazz to a 111-103 victory over New Jersey in the Nets' home opener at their new Rutgers University gym.

The Jazz led 22-19 at the quarter, 51-45 at the half and 88-72 after three quarters but the Nets rallied in the final period.

With 2:07 left, Al Skinner's two foul shots narrowed the count to three points, 102-99. A Gail Goodrich jump shot then put New Orleans up by five. Then Skinner committed his fifth personal, fouling Maravich, who converted one of two shots.

SKINNER THEN hit another jump shot, reducing the margin to four points, but while trying to steal the ball from Maravich committed his sixth personal, giving the Jazz star the opportunity to hit two fouls and put the game away at 107-101.

Len Robinson and Goodrich each added 18 points for New Orleans, with Robinson adding 19 rebounds. For the Nets, Skinner was high with 28 points, Bubbles Hawkins contributed 19 and rookie Bernard King had 18 points and 12 rebounds.

Second-year guard Larry Wright scored 16 third-quarter points to spark Washington to a 117-109 victory over the Detroit Pistons in the Bullets' NBA season opener.

Mitch Kupchak, another second-year pro, came off the bench to lead the Bullets with 29 points, his regular-season career high, including 13-of-16 shots from the floor. Wright finished with 19, while Bob Dandridge had 18, Wes Unselo had 17 and Tom Henderson 14. Elvin Hayes, the Bullets' star forward, was held to seven points before fouling out with 5:17 remaining.

BOB LANIER, the Pistons' 6-foot-11 center, led his club with 33 points, while Eric Money contributed 20.

The Bullets, who led 59-53 at halftime, scored six of the first eight points in the second half — four of them by Wright — to take control. Washington, led by Wright and Kupchak, eventually stretched that margin to 17 points, 90-73, late in the third quarter.

The Pistons, 1-2, crept within six, 95-89, with an eight-point burst in the final period, but two foul shots by Dandridge and a foul shot and a basket by Wright rescued the Bullets from danger.

LUCIUS ALLEN scored 30 points to lift Kansas City to a 95-94 victory over the Houston Rockets for the Kings' first victory of the 1977 season.

Allen, a Kansas City native playing his first home game as a King, scored 21 of his points in the first half and Kansas City raced off to a 62-46 lead. But the Kings scored just 16 third-quarter points to let the Rockets pull within 10.

Rudy Tomjanovich then led a furious Houston fourth-quarter surge with nine points and the Rockets three times pulled within five points. Calvin Murphy scored four points in the final 26 seconds for Houston to account for the final margin.

Richard Washington added 16 points for the Kings while Moses Malone and Tomjanovich each scored 19 to lead the Rockets. Murphy added 17 for the losers.

Last-minute goal keeps Flames in unbeaten ranks

NHL report

ATLANTA (UPI) — The Atlanta Flames got a last-minute goal from Pat Ribble to tie the New York Islanders 3-3 Friday night and remain one of just three unbeaten National Hockey League teams.

Ribble, a defenseman, jammed the puck past New York goalie Bill Smith with just :12 remaining on the clock after a scramble in front of the goalmouth. Atlanta had a sixth attacker on the ice at the time, having pulled goalie Dan Bouchard in the attempt to even the score.

The tie kept the Flames, 2-0-2 in the company of the idle Philadelphia Flyers and Montreal Canadiens as the league's three clubs witout a loss. The Islanders are 1-2-2.

Atlanta's Bill Clement opened the scoring in the first period in a short-handed situation but J. P. Parise tied the score later in the session for New York.

Flames' blueliner Barry Gibbs put his club ahead 2-1 on a shot from the point at 5:20 of the middle session, but the Islanders took a temporary lead with goals by rookie Mike Bossy and veteran Ed Westfall 24 seconds apart.

Favorites advance in girls tennis

The favorites came through as expected Friday in opening action of the girls' district tennis tournaments.

There were a few upsets along the line, but most of the ranking performers survived and will return today for concluding action in the Prospect and Hoffman Estates districts.

The top four singles and doubles finishers in each district advance to the girls state championship Thursday through Oct. 29 at Dist. 214 high schools. Arlington hosts the finals.

Top-seeded Nancy Webber of Maine West reached today's round at Prospect with a 6-2, 6-1 singles victory over Kraft of Sacred Heart.

LISA SMART, who earned the No. 2 seed and is the Mid-Suburban champion, defeated Deborah Sampson of Hersey 6-3, 6-1, and Janet Haberkorn of Arlington, the third-ranked player, eliminated Scarzynski of Sacred Heart 6-3, 6-2.

In other singles play leading to Saturday's finals it was Beth Wagner of Hersey over Michelle Brusseau of Buffalo Grove, 6-2, 6-1; Chris Richey of Arlington over Tish Russo of Fremd, 6-0, 6-1; Sue Legatowicz of Maine North over Sheryl Hettman of Palatine, the No. 6 seed, 6-1, 6-1; Denise Jenderzak of Maine West over Lynn Lavalle of Palatine, 7-5, 6-0; and Vicki Moore of Prospect over Curtis of Maine North, 6-0, 6-0.

The top-ranked doubles team of Laura Sanders and Kim Broderick of Arlington advanced with ease, eliminating Kelly Ritter and Chris Carlson 6-0, 6-0.

Lisa Young and Anne Hoffman of Prospect, who carried the No. 2 seed into Friday's action, had some problems but got by Jean Vetta and Karla Schrader of Hersey, 6-1, 1-6, 6-1.

SHERRY WEBER and Beth Klawitter of Arlington, No. 3 seed, got by Mary Harring and Gross of Fremd, 6-0, 6-2.

In other doubles play it was Lori Teutsch and Kathy Pfaender of Fremd over Rhonda Welch and Riforgiato of Buffalo Grove, 4-6, 6-3, 7-5; Julie Schwenn and Carla Rub of Prospect over Burk and Stenstrom of Maine West, 6-1, 6-0; Kelly McCroy and Cindy Sarna of Forest View over Martin and Caughlin of Hersey, 6-3, 6-1; Tricia Gosch and Chris Murphy of Sacred Heart over Miller and Scott of Maine North 7-6, 6-1; and Linda Berglas and Debbie Malinaro of Maine West over Teresa Jasonowicz and Sue Lundquist of Palatine 0-6, 6-4, 7-5.

Top-seeded Kate Swaya of Hoffman Estates topped the field in the Hoffman District with a 6-1, 6-0 victory over Jenny Diven of Conant sending her to today's play.

THE OTHER singles survivors in the Hoffman competition were Dawn Pavlik (St. Edward) over Barb Rowland (Fenton) 6-2, 3-6, 6-2; Kathryn Griner (Elgin Academy) over Joyce Bluemle (Larkin) 6-2, 6-1; Carol Johnson (Rolling Meadows) over Carol DeHaan (Elgin) 6-2, 7-5; Claudia Vana (lake Park) over Pam Ferris (Conant) 6-2, 6-2; Jenny Jimenez (Rolling Meadows) over Nancy Christensen (Elgin Academy) 6-0, 6-0; Cindy Landis (Schaumburg) over Karla Hultgren (Larkin) 6-3, 6-1; Kay Wenzel (Elgin) over Kim Herrman (Lake Park) 6-0, 6-0.

The doubles survivors in the Hoffman competition were:

Pam Shannon and Penny Thompson (Larkin), Janet Stiven and Laura Smith (Lake Park), Colleen Hengtgen and Linda O'Connor (St. Edward), Leslie Pawlowski and Kim Gonzin (Elk Grove), Michelle Baron and Gloria Chlebanowski (Fenton), and Cindy Keagle and Candy Kastning (Rolling Meadows).

Dennis Hull hangs up hockey skates

Black Hawk Dennis Hull, playing in the shadow of brother Bobby, announced his retirement from hockey Friday after 13 years in the big show. Dennis played 13 years for the Hawks at a wing and registered 298 goals.

His best season was in 1970-71 when he powered home 40 goals. He nearly matched that effort in 1972-73 when 39 goals and 51 assists boosted his production to 90 points. His slapshot was still rated second only to Richard Martin's.

Royals give Herzog new contract

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Kansas City Royals, who have posted the best record in the American League in the last 2½ years under Whitey Herzog, rewarded their manager Friday with another one-year contract.

Since Herzog took over as manager of the Royals July 24, 1975, Kansas City has posted a 233-157 record with two divisional championships. Herzog directed the Royals to their first divisional crown in 1976 with a 90-72 record and took them back to the top in the West in 1977 with the best record in baseball — 102-60.

"Whitey has done an outstanding job as manager of the Royals," said Kansas City General Manager Joe Burke. "We are very happy with his work and he is happy with the organization, which gives us an excellent relationship.

"All he discussed was a one-year contract and we are both happy. We are hopeful in the future to negotiate a string of 25 consecutive one-year contracts and break Walter Alston's string of 24 one-year contracts with the Dodgers."

Pate builds four-shot advantage

COLUMBUS, Ga. — Jerry Pate shot a 67 Friday to build a four-stroke lead over former champions Mac McLendon and Johnny Miller after two rounds of the $125,000 Southern Open golf tournament.

Pate had opened with a 64 over the par-70 Green Island Country Club course to leal by one stroke, but he pulled away from the field Friday with birdies on three out of the first four holes on the back nine of the 6,791-yard course and a 36-hole total of 131.

Pete's 6-under round Thursday had included three birdie putts of 20 feet or farther, but he sank nothing beyond eight feet in the second round.

Andretti secures Grand Prix pole

GOTEMBA, Japan — Mario Andretti, acting like he owns the Fuji Speedway circuit, set a lap record of one minute, 12:23 seconds Friday in the first day of qualifying to secure a solid grip on the pole position for Sunday's Japanese Grand Prix, final race of the 1977 Formula One racing season.

Andretti won the Japanese GP last year and held the previous record of 1:12.77. He is gunning for his fifth Formula One race of the season.

Ranked third in the world driver standings, where the absent Niki Lauda of Austria reigns as champion, Andretti said "the surface of the track was better than last year," but he was fearful over the condition of his Lotus. Andretti blew an engine at Mosport, Canada, on Oct. 9, costing him second place in the standings.

Twenty-three drivers from 15 countries will take the starting grid for Sunday's event on the 2.71-mile racing circuit that lies at the foot of Japan's famous Mt. Fuji. A second qualifying session will be held today.

Americans dominate tennis tourneys

SYDNEY — Vitas Gerulaitis defeated Aussie Phil Dent, 6-2, 6-2 Friday to give the United States three players in the semifinals of the $125,000 Australian Indoor Tennis Championships. Jimmy Connors and Nick Saviano won quarterfinals Thursday but Hank Pfister missed making it an all American semi when he bowed to 42-year-old Aussie vet Ken Rosewall, 6-2, 6-3, Friday.

In Barcelona, Spain, meanwhile, fourth-seeded Wojtek Fibak of Poland came back to defeat Hungary's Balazs Taroczy 4-6, 6-4, 6-1 in the $75,000 Count Gobo tennis tournament to join Bjorn Born, Manuel Orantes and Eddie Dibbs in the quarterfinals.

Stevenson bows

Dundee mixed in solid running and passing games to post an impressive 21-6 victory over Stevenson Friday night.

The Patriots had trouble getting untracked and could counter only a seven-yard run by Jim Pusateri in the third quarter.

Dundee had single touchdowns in the first, third and fourth periods.

Todd Schmitke paced the losing Patriots with 88 yards in 20 carries.

Herald harness expert off to sizzling start

Sam Sullivan, the Daily Herald's harness handicapper during Arlington Park's fall meeting, has broken quickly from the starting gate following a sensational week of picking winners in his Sullivan's Selections column.

The 27-year track veteran scored with almost half the winners during the first four nights of this week, hitting 18 in the winner's circle and two Quinella combinations.

Sullivan opened the prolific week by notching five winners on Monday including the second-race Quinella which he had listed in exact order for a $17.40 payoff.

Tuesday produced two more trips to the cashier's windows for Sullivan's followers while Wednesday's selections were laced with six winners and the second race Quinella, again for $17.40.

Sullivan rewarded his backers with five more winners Thursday night with paydays of $14.60, $11.40, $11.20, $6 and $5.80. He leads all Chicago metropolitan handicappers by at least seven victories.

The Daily Herald's graded selections include late scratches and driver changes.

Atlanta burning for a shot at the Bears

by BOB GALLAS

Falcons' head coach Leeman Bennett worked hard over the winter to convince everyone in Atlanta to be patient. As the newest and youngest coach in the NFL, Bennett promised a winner if he was given the time.

Everything was going fine until Bennett and the Falcons made a big mistake. They won three of their first four games and things have not been the same since.

"The whole offseason was geared to telling people it would take time," said Charlie Dayton, public relations director for the team. "Then we beat the Rams in our opener and everybody started talking about the Falcons again."

LEADING THE comeback in Atlanta is Bennett. Bennett, 39, has quietly overhauled the Falcons, who led the league in defense and, more importantly, has gained the respect of his team.

Claude Humphrey, the veteran Falcon defensive end, calls Bennett "pretty close to being the perfect coach," according to Dayton. The 10-year veteran was fed up with losing in Atlanta anl wanted to be traded after last season. He was not traded but admits he feels like he's with a new team.

Bennett started his coaching as a graduate assistant at Kentucky under Blanton Collier. After stints at Pittsburgh, the Naval Academy and Cincinnati in the college ranks, Bennett signed on as an assistant in the NFL with the Cardinals in 1970. In 1972 he moved to Detroit and in 1973 he joined Chuck Knox as a Rams' assistant, a position he held until taking the Atlanta job.

"He's gained a lot of respect around the league in a short time," said Dayton. "He was always well thought of, but didn't have too big a name."

THE FIRST thing Bennett did was scrap the team's conventional 3-4 defensive alignment, which had not been effective against the run. Now, the Falcons go to odd-man lines, with a tackle over center. They still move into the 3-4 passing situations, but the change reduced the number of yards gained rushing by the opposition by an average 60 yards a game over the previous year.

One of Bennett's assistants, Jerry Glanville, was hired off the Detroit staff. The Falcons have taken on many of the Lions' tendencies on defense, especially Detroits' stunting, blitzing style.

Probably the biggest difference Bennett has brought is his coaching organization, which is devoid of any titles. Though assistant coaches all have their own specific areas, all assistants have equal input to Bennett, who makes all the final decisions.

It's been the defense that his kept the Falcons going this season. Atlanta has yielded only 22 points in five games, including but three in last Sunday's 3-0 loss at Buffalo.

THE DEFENSE may have changed strategy but the personnel is pretty much intact from last year, with the exception of middle linebacker and left defensive tackle. Middle linebacker Tommy Nobis and tackle Mike Tilleman both retired and were replaced by Ralph Ortega and Jim Bailey respectively. Another new face will debut on defense this week. Rookie Ron McCartney will replace left outside linebacker Fulton Kuykendall, who broke his arm in the Buffalo game and will miss the remainder of the season.

It is the offense which has held back the Falcons. Running back Bubba Bean was injured in the preseason and will sit out the entire year, leaving the Falcons with a backfield that lacks speed.

The Falcons' passing game was hurt when starting quarterback Steve Bartkowski was hurt in the final preseason game. Scott Hunter, who has trouble throwing deep, has filled in, but Bartkowski is ready and able to return now. Should Hunter get off to a sluggish start this Sunday against the Bears, there isn't a soul in Georgia who does not expect Bartkowski to take over.

Though the Atlanta offense has been underwhelming thus far, Bears coach Jack Pardee is still concerned.

"They're not the type of offense that will run up 50 points on us, but we can't let them control the ball, either," Pardee said. "We can't play a passive defense because we're not going to score every time we get the ball against their defense."

THE BEARS' biggest problem this week is on the defensive line, where injury has thinned the ranks to the point where offensive tackle Jeff Sevy was hurriedly moved to defense this week. Defensive tackle Roger Stillwell unlerwent surgery for a damaged knee Monday and will miss the rest of the season. Defensive end Jerry Meyers, also hurt in the Minnesota game, hasn't practiced due to a sore knee, though he's expected to play sparingly Sunday.

Not counting Sevy, who can't be expected to see more than spot duty this soon, the Bears have only five defensive linemen healthy. The bright spot is that defensive tackle Wally Chambers came through last week's game without needing treatment for his ailing knee. Chambers should see plenty of action Sunday.

MSL runners going out of town to decide champ

by ART MUGALIAN

For Palatine, the battle is half won. For Fremd, it is half lost. And for Prospect and Hersey, the battle is just beginning.

The Mid-Suburban League boys cross country meet will be a battle royal for all 14 of the conference teams, but for Palatine, Fremd, Prospect and Hersey the stakes are a little higher.

WHEN THE BIGGEST field in MSL running history gets moving at 11 a.m. today at Veteran Acres Park in — of all places — Crystal Lake, Palatine will attempt to sever Fremd's record streak of five league harrier titles.

Palatine's Pirates have already done half the job. Their 27-29 dual meet victory over Fremd 10 days ago virtually eliminated any chance the Vikings had for repeating as over-all MSL champs. The Pirates clinched their first North Division title with the win, which also broke Fremd's state-record 64 straight dual meet victory streak.

But a tie is still a distinct possibility. If Fremd wins the meet and Palatine finishes second, the two Palatine schools would share the conference trophy. A Pirate victory gives them sole possession of the crown.

"It's going to be pretty hard for anybody to touch Fremd or Palatine," said one MSL coach, but others weren't so sure.

ONE COACH WHO has his team's sights set on the over-all conference title is Prospect's Joe Wanner. His Knights are South Division champs for the second time in the last three years, and a victory in today's meet would mean the title to Wanner's boys. A second-place finish could give the Knights a conference co-championship.

"I really think we can run with Fremd," said Wanner, whose squad is primed and ready.

No South Division team has ever won the conference title, but this is only the third year divisions have been recognized.

Hersey, the third place team in the North, has no chance to win the title outright, and head coach Larry Travis sees little chance of winning the meet. But the Huskies, young and charging, are pointing to districts and sectionals.

A SERIES OF injuries, however, may hamper Hersey in today's warm-up for next week's district meet.

The meet, hosted by Barrington, the league's newest member, will showcase an array of talent from one of the state is most powerful cross country conferences. One state-wide coaches' poll ranks Fremd No. 2in Illinois, Palatine No. 5, and Hersey No. 13. Prospect, inexplicably, is unranked, and South Division runnerup Hoffman Estates was as high as 18th earlier in the season.

Three of the top four individuals from last year's meet, held at Buffalo Grove, have returned for this year's meet, including 1976 sectional champ Tom Johnson of Palatine. Last year, Johnson finished second behind Forest View senior Darryl Robinson. Buffalo Grove's Joe Schmidt and Fremd's Matt Filosa, just a junior, are also back from last year.

Others who earned all-conference honors by placing in the top 14 last year and who return this season are Fremd's Bob Ratcliffe and Dan Inbody, Palatine's Kevin Nikolai, and Hersey's Steve Johnson. Johnson is just a junior.

PALATINE'S Chuck Elliott, who was ill last year but still finished 20th in the conference race, should give the Pirates an unmatched trio of runners alongside Johnson and Nikolai. In the dual meet against Fremd, Palatine's troika finished 1-2-4.

"This will be a meet in which people will have to respect other teams' fourth, fifth and sixth men," said Fremd coach Roy Hascup.

Hascup's own group is a little deeper and a bit more balanced than Palatine's. The Vikings would like to be able to put seven runners in front of Palatine's fifth man. Fremd's top man is junior Tom Ross, who was 18th last year as a sophomore.

Prospect's pack is led by senior Mark Smith, who along with Wheeling's Ben Sanchez and Buffalo Grove's Schmidt may pose the greatest challenge to Tom Johnson for the individual title. Johnson was favored last year before Robinson beat him in the conference and state meets.

Improving teams from Schaumburg, Arlington, Wheeling and Forest View will battle Hoffman Estates for the remaining spots in the upper half of the league standings.

Schaumburg junior Tom Placek and Arlington's Jim Lear will be among those runners fighting for a berth on the all-conference team.

Teams from Conant, Rolling Meadows and Elk Grove round out the list of the league's 14 entries.

Weiler was also elected President of the Illinois Section PGA at the annual meeting.

Decisive Big Eight games on tap

by JENNY KELLNER

There comes at time each fall when at least one Big Eight school appears to establish itself as a potentially undefeated team, if not a candidate for the national championship.

The time usually occurs at the beginning of the college football season, as the conference teams routinely upset top-ranked ones and go undefeated for a few weeks — before facing their cannibalistic conference mates.

Then comes a weekend like last Saturday. The eight football squads in the league battled each other for the first total schedule of league games — and from top to bottom only seven points separated any two teams.

OKLAHOMA had a tough time with Missouri, emerging with a 21-17 victory, Oklahoma State beat Kansas State, 21-14, Nebraska was upset by Iowa State, 24-21, and then fourth-ranked Colorado could only come up with a 17-17 tie with Kansas, which dropped them into the No. 7 spot in the UPI ratings. Nebraska dropped to 17th.

Colorado is still undefeated (5-0-1), but its spot in the ratings could slip even further Saturday if history holds its course.

The Buffaloes face Nebraska at Lincoln, a series that the Cornhuskers have won 14 of the past 15 years, and hold an overall 23-11-1 advantage.

Despite the fact that the Cornhuskers have been disappointing this year (4-2), they are the 3-point favorites, which does not surprise Colorado coach Bill Mallory although he would dearly love to disprove the line.

"NOT CONSIDERING the way the

series stands, but everything is depending on this game," Mallory said. "This game will determine the rest of the season — if we lose, it will be the toughest loss. Our backs are against the wall and we'll just have to go to Lincoln and show some character."

The Buffaloes are led by fullback James Mayberry, who has 601 yards in 96 carries for a 6.3 average and six touchdowns, while Nebraska counters with sophomore I.M. Hipp, the fifth-leading rusher in the country with 786 yards in 101 carries, for a 7.8 average and also six touchdowns.

The Buffaloes, however, have a definite advantage in their offensive line, none of whom are less than 6-foot-3 and 250 pounds. Furthermore, Nebraska has been having trouble of late with its defensive line, and there is where the game could be decided

In other games involving nationally ranked teams, No. 1 Michigan faces unranked Minnesota, No. 2 Texas is a 17-point favorite over Southern Methodist University, Alabama is an off-the-board favorite over Louisville. No. 4 Southern California is a six-point favorite over 10th-ranked Notre Dame, No. 5 Ohio State is off the board over Northwestern, No. 6 Oklahoma is favored by 14 over Iowa State, No. 8 Arkansas is favored by 11 over Houston and No. 9 Penn State is a 14-point favorite over West Virginia.

MICHIGAN WAS undefeated and ranked No. 1 in the nation when it made a trip to Purdue last year, losing 16-14.

Undefeated and ranked No. 1 again, Michigan is expected to have little trouble against 20-point underdog Minnesota on Saturday, but the Wolverines know that can quickly change if they continue to be slowed by injuries.

Pheasant number dwindling again

Jim Cook

Outdoor editor

The majestic flight of Illinois' ringneck pheasant is headed for a crash landing.

The grim forecast that prospects are 50 per cent down from last year's mediocre harvest is the result of several factors that have decimated the state's once booming ringneck population.

Hunters who remember the great dive in 1974, when pheasant numbers hit an all-time low of about 394,000, will be reminded of the limited shooting opportunities when they take to the field Nov. 12 through Jan. 15.

A CENSUS, conducted annually by the Illinois Dept. of Conservation through an area including Cook County, turned up a grand total of five birds.

"The pheasant population is very low this year," said Richard Warner, assistant wildlife specialist with the Illinois Natural History Survey on the campus of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

"The prospects are worse than last year and hunters will have to put in a few more hours for each bird they shoot."

Biologists attribute the dramatic decline to the severe winter weather that paralyzed the Midwest with subzero temperatures and snow.

"Last year's winter kill took at least half of the pheasants," Warner said, "and all in a 24-hour period."

THE PIVOTAL date was Jan. 29, 1977, when strong winds, combined with falling snow and extremely low temperatures, blew snow into pheasants' beaks and gullets, forming an icy crust and smothering the birds.

The ringneck also is vulnerable when its extremely long tail feathers become frozen to the ground, immobilizing the pheasant. The result is starvation.

In addition to winter kill, farmer's fall plowing methods are reducing habitat and food sources for the ringneck. Intensive row-crop practices are causing the disappearance of hedgerows and hay fields. With the early harvest of corn and bean fields, few areas remain for hunting. The cover areas for the bird is roadside grasses and weeds — off limits to the gun-toting hunter.

Pheasants can survive cold weather if a natural food source and a place to nest over the winter are available. But even roadside mowing, in addition to all of the other factors, is threatening to make the pheasant an endangered dinner.

"ABOUT the only thing that's going to work now is limited roadside mowing," said Glen C. Sanderson, head of the wildlife research section of the survey. But he admitted that few farmers are interested in "woody planting," preferring instead to use all available space for their crops. Highway officials already have been persuaded to stop mowing certain areas along state and federal highways.

Farmers should not necessarily shoulder the blame for intensive farming practices. The game of economics encourages them to harvest every ounce of production from the land.

But IDC programs such as "Acres for Wildlife," which urges farmers to maintain areas of habitat, food and cover, must be reinstituted with new vigor.

BECAUSE hunters are allowed to shoot only cock pheasants, the suggestion to further cut the bag limit from its current two per day and four in possession seems unreasonable.

There also have been hints from sportsmen who would be willing to forego a season of shooting in hopes that the ringneck population would regain the proliferation of the mid-1960s. It might also mark the return of the three-bird daily and six in possession limits that Illinois hunters enjoyed as recently as 1974.

The most sensible approach to protect the ringneck pheasant appears to be to shorten the season. After the disaster of 1974, the 1975 season was reduced 15 days and the bag limit reduced from three roosters to two.

The adjustments helped restore the 394,000 pheasant harvested in 1974 back to 606,000 in 1975 and 640,000 last year.

WITH a life expectancy of only 14-15 months whether it is hunted or not, the ringneck pheasant deserves our immediate attention and action.

P i g e o n-under-glass just doesn't sound right.

RINGNECK PHEASANTS will be few and far between this season because of the severe 1976 winter and intensive farming conditions that threaten to wipe out critical habitat and food supplies.

Hunters must follow boating rules as well

When waterfowl hunters hop into their boats on the way to the blind, they should keep in mind that they are boaters first and hunters second.

Too often sportsmen think of the boat only as a platform from which to engage in other activities and overlook rules of safe operation and boating laws.

Mechanically-powered watercraft must carry fire extinguishers plus one wearable flotation device (vest, preserver or jacket), or throwable device (such as a cushion or ring buoy) for each person aboard boats under 16 feet in length.

Watercraft 16 feet and longer require one wearable device for each person plus one throwable device per boat. All devices must be Coast Guard approved.

Because waterfowlers embark before sunrise, they also must have running lights on mechanically-powered craft. On non-powered craft, they must have a lantern, flashlight or other device for emitting light. Powered watercraft must also carry a sound-producing device capable of an audible blast of two seconds duration which can be heard a quarter-mile away.

Hunters shooting diverse targets

Illinois hunter preference is as diverse as the game the sportsman is allowed to harvest. More than 480,000 hunters take to the field annually, and while some enthusiasts hunt as many as eight species, other sportsmen prefer to specialize, focusing their attention just one or two species.

The cottontail rabbit has long been the most heavily hunted animal in the state while Hungarian partridge is the least pursued game species, not including wild turkey.

Following are the estimated percentages of licensed sportsmen hunting each species, except whitetail deer and turkey, both regulated by special permits:

Rabbit 67.16; pheasant 43.75; fox squirrel 39.06; bobwhite quail 35.15; dove 23.94; gray squirrel 20.56; ducks 15.93; raccoon 10.68; geese 7.82; red fox 4.61; crow 3.98; coyote 3.70; woodcock 2.42; gray fox 1.95; and Hungarian partridge 1.09.

Teal hunters found using wrong shot

Illinois teal hunters had the dubious distinction of being the first persons in the nation arrested for violating the new federal steel shot regulations.

Conservation police said 11 persons were arrested for possession of lead shot while hunting in steel shot zones during Illinois' special teal season.

DUCK HUNTERS are planting decoys this morning for the opening of the waterfowl season. Ducks and geese became legal targets at sunrise. The season extends through Dec. 5 in the northern zone of Illinois with good hunting prospects forecast.

Available deer permits abundant

More than 1,400 firearm deer hunting permits still are available for 16 counties, as of today. The permits are being allocated on a first-come, first-served basis to applicants using the official 1977 application form.

"We have sold all permits available the past three years and we were surprised so many permits were remaining this near the season," said David Kenney, director of the Illinois Department of Conservation. "In the past, many hunters were denied hunting permits because all were sold. It appears there are plenty of hunting permits for all deer hunters this year."

Counties with permits available are: Edwards, 49; Ford, 29; Gallatin, 83; Henderson, 118; Henry, 33; Marshall, 17; Massac, 235; Mercer, 87; Pulaski, 98; Putnam, 30; Rock Island, 127; Scott, 78; Stark, 20; Warren, 245; Whiteside, 112; and Winnebago, 43.

The firearm deer season in November, 18, 19 and 20 and December 9, 10 and 11.

Steel shot scarce in some areas

A census shows that 76 per cent of the Illinois retail ammunition dealers have steel shot in stock, but perhaps not in all the needed places. Western Illinois, which contains several steel shot counties and hunting areas, was found to be most lacking in steel shot.

The survey found prices varying from $5.70 per box to $9.69 for 2 3/4-in. shells. Hunters planning to use 12-gauge guns in steel shot areas may wish to shop around for the best prices but should purchase shells in advance.

YOUR NEW CAR NEEDS RUSTPROOFING.

BUT BEFORE YOU GET IT, BE SURE YOU GET REAL RUSTPROOFING. NOT A COVER-UP COATING.

There isn't one 1977 model that doesn't need additional rustproofing protection when it leaves the showroom floor. The only question is who can deliver the real rustproofing protection needed to retain its appearance and value. One sure answer is your Ziebart Dealer. He's got the expertise, the patented spray tools and the exclusive Ziebart process to assure you the protection your new car needs. With the cost of a 1977 car, can you afford anything less than real Ziebart protection?

IT'S US. OR RUST.

BIG BUSINESS

"We've gotten a few complaints about your strict management theories."

Congress' hidden taxes contribute greatly to inflation, Crane says

by JOHN N. FRANK

Congress is the major cause of inflation because it continues to impose "hidden taxes" on American business, Rep. Philip Crane, R-12th, said Friday.

"Congress never wants to impose higher taxes, so we hide how we raise taxes," Crane told a group of area business people attending a Northwest Suburban Assn. of Commerce and Industry seminar at Lancer's Restaurant in Schaumburg.

Hidden taxes include funding federal programs by increasing the national deficit and expanding present taxing programs to include more people, Crane said.

Philip Crane

CONGRESS ALSO contributes to inflation by imposing a maze of regulations on business, he said. Complying with those regulations is forcing business to raise its prices and in the end the consumer is being hurt, Crane said.

"The businessman is not working for the person he is supposed to be working for, the consumer. You are devoting more and more of your time to being accountable to Washington, D.C. and to Springfield," Crane said.

What is needed to stop inflation and promote a healthy growth rate in the economy is an end to government "over-regulation" and hidden taxation to pay for unsuccessful social programs, Crane said.

"We should redefine the functions that the national government alone can solve. A great deal of what government is doing should not be done by government at all," Crane said.

ONE EXAMPLE is President Carter's energy plan, which Crane said is not really an energy plan, but another hidden taxing plan designed to raise $20 billion in new tax revenues, he said.

Crane sees the answer in deregulating the prices of natural gas and letting the market dictate the price consumers pay for their gas.

"The price of everything has gone up and we have to expect increased prices," Crane said. But raising prices will eliminate shortages because producers will have the economic incentive to find fuel now too costly to take out of the ground because of price controls, Crane said.

"Carter was telling us that price has nothing to do with supply. It makes you wonder who ran the peanut business. It must have been Billy," Crane said regarding recent debate on the energy plan.

Regarding the current sluggish state of the economy, Crane said, "The only solution to the problem right now is massive and major tax cuts," of 30 per cent for everyone.

Consumer price up in September

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer prices edged upward by only 0.3 per cent in September to match the smallest monthly rise in the inflation rate this year, the government reported Friday.

The White House labeled the Labor Dept. report a "welcome respite for consumers." The new statistics also offered encouragement to the administration that its 1977 inflation goal can be reached.

The September increase was identical to the one registered in August and came to 3.6 per cent on an annual rate basis — sharply below the 10 per cent pace of last winter and the 8.1 per cent in the spring.

CONSUMER PRICES in the Chicago area rose 0.7 per cent in September and stand 6.6 per cent above the level of one year ago, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics said Friday.

The increase means consumers must pay $106.60 for the same goods and services that cost $100 in September, 1976.

About half of the September increase was caused by increases in shelter costs, the bureau said. Lowered costs in transportation offered some moderation.

The administration has predicted an inflation rate of 6.9 per cent for the full year. After the first nine months of 1977, it was 6.6 per cent above last year's pace for the same period.

"The President is gratified and encouraged by the continued moderation in consumer price inflation and pleased the slowdown in consumer price increases over the past several months has been broad based," White House Press Secretary Jody Powell said.

"THOUGH IT doesn't mean our problems are over, it is a welcome respite for consumers."

The good news was tempered, however, by another Labor Dept. report showing that workers' real spendable earnings dropped 0.4 per cent from the August level.

Courtenay Slater, the Commerce Department's chief economist, said while inflation may edge up during the final three months of the year, "we stand a very good chance of meeting our goal or perhaps bettering it."

The Consumer Price Index last month stood at 184.0 on a 1967 base of 100, meaning items costing $10 a decade ago went for $18.40 last month.

Stable food costs were the main factor in the inflation slowdown, the department said. Consumer food prices went up only 0.1 per cent last month, the same as in July and well under the 0.3 per cent climb in August.

Prices declined last month for a number of food items, including ground coffee and dairy products — the latter taking the first drop in seven months.

Galbraith blasts Carter economics

Harvard professor and economist John Kenneth Galbraith says the Carter administration has taken no action against inflation and unemployment and continues to adhere to outdated economic theories. Galbraith told the 30th anniversary dinner of the southeastern Pennsylvania chapter of Americans for Democratic Action Thursday night that this adherence to keynesian economic policies "put the burden of preventing inflation on the unemployed." John Maynard Keynes' economic theories said that as inflation goes up, unemployment goes down, and vice versa.

Panel sends energy bill to Senate

The Senate finance committee gave final approval Friday to an energy tax bill vastly different from President Carter's request, and sent it to the Senate floor for action starting Tuesday. The 13-5 vote ratified action taken earlier by the committee, which withheld final approval until Friday to give all senators time to read the language of the bill and report. The final bill, which contains no tax increases as Carter wanted, contains $40 billion over eight years in tax credits and incentives designed to induce conservation and production of energy, as well as to encouage plants and utilities to switch from gas and oil to other fuels.

White House criticizes Fed

The White House has selected an unusual forum to criticize the Federal Reserve Board over sharply rising interest rates. The White House posted a "notice to the press" late Thursday which included an explicit warning that any further substantial increases in short-term interest rates could refuel inflation and damage the nation's fragile economy. The criticism came with no advance notice and appeared to escalate the continuing debate between the administration and the nation's central bank over the course of the economy.

'Belgian firms not dumping steel'

Belgian Prime Minister Leo Tindemans denied charges Friday by the National Steel Corp. that Belgium has been dumping steel in the United States. "I don't believe we are practicing dumping," Tindemans told guests at a National Press Club luncheon in his honor. "I think some enterprises are selling steel at losses at this moment, but not dumping. Not Belgium." The National Steel Corp. complaint accused Belgium, France, Italy, West Germany and the Netherlands of illegally selling cold rolled and zinc coated sheets below cost here. It accused the United Kingdom only of dumping cold-rolled sheets. It asked the U.S. Treasury Dept. to assess special duties on the imports.

Treasury to cover deficit

The U.S. Treasury Dept. said Friday it would raise $4.1 billion in new money to help finance the budget deficit in the first quarter of the new fiscal year. Assistant Treasury Sec. Roger Altman also said administration forecast of a $45.7 billion deficit for the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30 appeared to be on target. Altman said the annual data was preliminary, but there was no reason to believe the fiscal 1977 deficit would be substantially different from the $45.7 billion forecast Aug. 1. He said the Treasury expected to raise $18.75 billion for the quarter. In another development, the Federal Reserve Board released the September report of the open market committee, which reflected a consensus to permit the money supply to continue moderate expansion.

Timber shortage hikes costs

The sharp increase in new housing starts is the principal reason for soaring lumber and plywood prices, government and timber industry officials Friday told a Senate committee. But a shortage of timber is also a factor, said a spokesman for the nation's housing industry, noting lumber prices have risen faster than prices for other construction materials. Robert Arquilla, president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, joined the lumber industry in calling for cutting back on wilderness proposals and for increased timber production from national forests. Director Barry Bosworth of the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability called new home construction — which has nearly tripled from 1975 recession lows — "the single most important influence on the price of lumber products."

U.S. firms operate at 80%

The operating rate of U.S. industrial firms during September was 80 per cent of capacity, the same as in August, according to McGraw-Hill Publications Co. The company's economics department said slightly higher industrial production in September was offset by the estimated monthly addition to industrial capacity. It said manufacturing industries operated at 80.5 per cent of capacity during the month, while utilties were at 70.5 per cent, both figures identical to those of August. The operating rate of mining industries was 78.5 per cent, up from the 72 per cent August rate.

Figures misleading, not leading

Louis Rukeyser

NEW YORK — Q. Where are the Government's "leading economic indicators" most likely to lead you? Astray.

The latest flipflop, which has so confused Wall Street and anyone else foolish enough to pay these indicators uncritical attention, dramatizes their inadequacy as an economic, or stock market, forecasting tool.

When the composite index declined, however slightly, in the reports on May, June and July, the prophets of doom took it as holy writ. A definite trend had now been established, they told us, and recession was staring us in the face.

THEN, WONDER of wonders, the next month's report stood this "definite trend" on its head. Late revisions, we were told, had turned the July decline in the composite index into an 0.2 per cent gain thereby reducing the string of declines from the "magical" three to an inconclusive two, and furthermore reducing the cumulative decline to a mere 0.4 per cent.

Nor was that all. The preliminary figures for August indicated a monthly increase so strong (0.8 per cent) that it (1) wiped out all the losses of May and June, and (2) put the index well above its April level, thus reestablishing a basic uptrend in the U.S. economy.

This is not to say that the "leading economic indicators" are worth heeding only when they are positive. On the contrary, their forecasting record over the years suggests that they be taken with a great deal of caution no matter which way they point.

There have been 39 separate occasions since 1948 when the series has declined. If you had panicked on each of those occasions, you would have long since gone broke.

BUT LET'S PLAY fair: everyone agrees that it takes three months to establish a credible trend. So let's cross off 21 of those 39 occasions: the ones when the decline lasted only one or two months. That leaves us with 18 occasions when, for periods lasting between three and eleven months, the Commerce Department's index pointed steadily downward.

Have we had 18 recessions in that period? We have had, to be precise, six.

Among those two-out-of-three wrong signals: A three-month drop in late 1950 and a seven-month decline in early 1951, though no recession occurred for another two years. Three separate declines of five, four and six months in 1955-56, though recession did not return till mid-1957. A nine-month decline in 1966, followed by no recession at all.

But if the "leading economic indicators" have a faulty record as an economic forecaster, they are an even poorer guide to stock market prospects. For one thing, stock prices are themselves one of the twelve indicators in the composite. They are themselves always trying to look to the economic future, rather than the present and sometimes they even manage it. Those who were baffled by the stock market's strong rally in 1974-75, despite an eleven-month leading indicators decline, failed to grasp this.

The leading indicators aren't totally worthless; they have, for example, declined before each of the actual six recessions. And to the extent they may influence business and investment psychology, they have to be watched. But watched carefully, critically and calmly because there is often less there than meets the eye.

Nation's second largest bank raises interest rate

NEW YORK (UPI) — Citibank, the nation's second largest bank, Friday raised its prime interest rate one quarter point to 7¾ per cent, the highest level for the benchmark rate in two years.

Citibank's action followed a move by the Carter Administration Thursday in warning the federal reserve against further tightening of the nation's money supply.

Although the White House statement did not differ substantially from views previously expressed by Charles Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, the administration chose an unusual forum for its release in a "notice to the press" late Thursday.

THE STATEMENT included an explicit warning that any further substantial increases in short-term interest rates could damage the fragile economy.

The Fed has been following a tighter monetary policy — moving to push up the cost of borrowing money by its control over member banks reserves — to contain the rapid growth in the money supply this year and to ward off a possible reigniting of inflation.

But the money supply has continued to grow far faster than the Fed's target rate of 5 per cent. Although the money supply was level when the Fed's weekly report was released Thursday, it has surged during early October, growing by $4.9 billion last week. Through the end of September, it had grown at an annual rate of 7.8 per cent.

As the Fed has clamped down on credit, short-term interest rates have soared and there has been increasing criticism that its policy has slowed the growth of the economy by hindering business expansion.

The White House took note of this in its statement.

"Somewhat faster monetary growth has been needed to maintain an adequate rate of economic expansion," the statement said. "Recent rates of monetary growth haven't therefore, been inflationary, even though they have been above the target set by the Federal Reserve."

The White House statement also said "the speed with which interest rates have been increasing has unsettled the stock market." High interest rates, which draw funds from equities to higher-yielding securities, have been partly blamed for the weakness of the market.

Employer Social Security tax hike passed by panel

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee voted Friday to break with tradition and raise Social Security payroll taxes more for employers than for employes.

But the committee failed to reach final agreement on a bill to finance Social Security into the next century. Chairman Russell Long, D-La., said the panel would meet again.

Because of that, Friday's vote conceivably could be undone.

Since its inception in 1935, Social Security has been financed by payroll taxes paid equally by employers and employes.

The fund now is running a $5 billion-a-year deficit and, unless Congress acts, it will run out of money in the early 1980s. To avoid this, both houses of Congress are preparing bills which, among other steps, would raise Social Security taxes.

The question is: whose taxes will be raised:

Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., proposed a formula Friday under which the wage "base" — that portion of a worker's pay on which both he and his employer pay Social Security tax — would rise much faster for employers than for employes.

The base is now $16,500 for calculating both the employer's and the employe's tax.

Stocks fall to 2-year low

NEW YORK (UPI) — Stocks finished a dismal week by falling to a two-year law Friday in the wake of rising interest rates and a White House attack on Federal Reserve Board Chairman Arthur F. Burns. Trading was moderate.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average, which rose 2.60 points Thursday, fell 6.50 points to 808.30, the lowest level since it finished at 794.55 on Oct. 2, 1975. The Dow lost 13.34 points for the week and had dropped 196.35 points so far this year.

Trendsetting Citibank triggered early selling by raising its prime lending rate a quarter point to 7¾ per cent, the highest level in two years. Several banks followed the lead.

THE FED'S latest figures, showing no change in the nation's basic money supply following a $4.9 billion surge the week before, added to the selling pressure because many had speculated there would be a decline.

Thursday's report may force the Fed to raise its discount rate it charges member banks for loans from 5¾ to around 6¼ per cent, according to the Wall Street Journal. This would mean higher interest rates all around.

Another factor behind the selling was the White House's warning to the Fed late Thursday not to raise interest rates. Analysts said the statement was an attack on Burns, who is widely respected on Wall Street.

These factors overshadowed the Labor Dept. report that consumer prices rose only 0.3 per cent in September Citicorp, however, said its latest survey showed consumer confidence was at a 15-month low.

AGAINST THAT background, the New York Stock Exchange common stock index fell 0.17 to 50.61, the lowest level since 50.29 on Jan. 9, 1976, and the average price of a share decreased by 9 cents.

Declines topped advances, 811 to 556, among the 1,849 issues crossing the composite tape at 4 p.m. EDT.

Big board volume totaled 20,230,000 shares, down from the 20,520,000 traded Thursday.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter at 4 p.m. EDT totaled 21,514,708 shares, compared with 22,451,680 Thursday.

AT&T breakup would cost: Watts

Higher phone costs, shoddy equipment and fewer jobs will result if federal government attempts to break up American Telephone & Telegraph succeed, said Glenn Watts, president of the 600,000-member Communication Workers of America.

The Bell system "is a national treasure that ought to be preserved," Watts said.

Recent moves by the Federal Communication Commission to allow non-AT&T firms to sell telephone equipment in order to encourage competition will only hurt American phone users, he said.

Glenn Watts

"IN A COUPLE of years you'll go down to the corner drugstore and buy a telephone and it will be so cheaply made that the day after the warranty expires it will stop working," said Watts in an interview during a CWA regional meeting at the Arlington Park Hilton, Arlington Heights.

Rather than allow the FCC to promote competition, Congress should put a halt to such action while it forms an impartial panel to study the future of the telecommunication industry, Watts said.

"This (Bell) system has provided the best service at the lowest cost to the most people and has proven the best system in the world," Watts said.

But to deprive it of the revenues from the rental of phones and other equipment to customers would mean "the vital telephone industry could soon find itself in the same shambles the postal service is in today," Watts said.

RATES WOULD increase and employes probably would be laid off, he said.

Jobs would become available in new phone companies, Watts said, but they probably would be at a lower pay scale than CWA members and others currently receive from AT&T.

In the area of wages, Watts said he considers his union's new contract with AT&T one that will not contribute to inflation. The contract calls for wage increases totaling 25 cents over the three-year life of the contract.

The Federal Council on Wage and Price Controls has estimated the contract will increase the cost of phone service 6.1 per cent nationwide during the next three years.

Watts also commented on the following topics of concern to his union:

• The Panama Canal Treaty: The union favors the treaty. "We don't own it, we never should have owned it and we never had sovereignty over it."

• President Carter's economic policies: "I would probably give him higher marks than most."

• Energy problems facing the country: Price controls should be maintained on natural gas and oil to prevent using up these resources still available in this country, he said.

Reports of slowing economy drives Dow down 13 points

NEW YORK (UPI) — Stocks fell to a two-year low this week as government reports confirmed the economy had slowed down and the Carter administration blamed the Federal Reserve Board for some of the trouble. Trading was active.

The Dow Jones, industrial average, which plunged 18.71 points last week, fell another 13.34 points to 808.30, the lowest level since it finished at 794.55 Oct. 2, 1975. The Dow now has lost 196.35 points for the year.

The New York Stock Exchange common stock index dropped .63 to 50.61, the lowest mark since 50.29 Jan. 6, 1976. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, containing some over-the-counter issues, fell 1.24 to 92.32, its lowest level since 90.90 Jan. 2, 1976.

Declines routed advances, 1,176 to 655, among the 2,088 issues crossing the composite tape.

Big board volume totaled 100,248,000 shares, compared with 95,167,250 last week and 83,613,570 traded during the same week a year ago.

Composite volume of NYSE issues listed on all U.S. exchanges and over the counter totaled 114,503,510 shares, compared with 109,125,590 last week.

Much selling surrounded some disappointing earnings results and the Commerce Department's report that the third-quarter Gross National Product, adjusted for inflation, rose 3.8 per cent, down from 6.2 per cent in the second quarter and 7.5 per cent in the first.

While the report did not surprise many economists, former President Ford called for an immediate tax cut to stimulate the economy. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps said she thought the third-quarter 1978 might be appropriate.

Q&T® opens new Bartlett Area Office

Quinlan and Tyson's new Bartlett Area Office is located at 310 South Main Street.

Our new facility is a custom-designed office, the 13th residential sales office to be opened by our company, the leading real estate firm in the Northwest Suburban Area. We're also No. 1 in sales in the North Shore and Lake County marketing areas.

The new office, our fifth in the Northwest Area, was opened to serve Bartlett and area residents even better from a convenient location. In addition to Bartlett, our office serves Hanover Park, Streamwood, Roselle and adjacent towns.

The sales staff is headed by Joyce Richards, Sales Manager and licensed real estate broker. The staff is composed of full-time, professional salespersons trained to meet the needs of the buying and selling public.

Our office is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. seven days a week to serve you. The phone number is 289-9600.

Quinlan and Tyson has grown tremendously since it was founded in 1884. Today, Q&T has 14 convenient sales locations serving 65 North Shore and Northwest Suburban communities.

In the future, we intend to continue our growth in sales and service for our valued customers. We will continue to measure our success in terms of service, not just sales volume.

We pledge to follow the honest and forthright policies which have served us — and our customers — so well in the past. The good will of the customers we serve, a legacy from past years, is a priceless business asset.

Deregulating prices is 'robbery'

Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — The industry's effort to deregulate the price of newly discovered natural gas threatens to be one of the boldest and biggest steals of all time. "What is being done here is the greatest unarmed robbery in the history of the country," according to Sen. Don Riegle (D-Mich.).

It's important to get some impression of the monumental nature of the rip-pff. Not content with a price increase for new gas of 445 per cent between 1972 and 1976, the industry in reality is seeking to get the equivalent of the monopoly price of oil, as set by OPEC, $2.50-$2.75 per thousand cubic feet.

That would give the industry a price increse of 2,000 per cent — yes, 20 times the 13 to 14 cent price at which it was making a good profit in 1968.

THE INDUSTRY lament is that it needs ever higher prices to provide incentive for new explorations. But a hard-to-counter analysis by the Consumer Federation of America shows that while prices were increasing 445 per cent between 1972 and 1976, gas production decreased 12 per cent, reserves declined 19 per cent and profits boomed by 50 per cent.

Lee C. White, former chairman of the Federal Power Commission, now lobbying hard against deregulation, observes that before 1968, "we argued over pennies." And for good reason: Every added penny on the gas price per thousand cubic feet costs consumers $200 million. Every dime costs $2 billion.

Yet, in an effort to stave off the greedy drive for total deregulation, hard-pressed Democratic senators are giving away dimes and quarters like chicken feed.

Last year, two statistical agencies of the Federal Power Commission estimated that a fair price for "new" natural gas was between 60 cents and 67 cents, "fair price" meaning a return of 15 to 18 per cent.

BUT THE COMMISSION itself figured the fair price at $1.42, allowing, in its computation, a federal tax burden calculated at the theoretical corporate tax table maximum of 48 per cent. Of course, no industry pays 48 per cent. "If they paid more than 7 per cent (as an effective tax rate), they need a new lawyer," says White.

Then the Carter administration came along, after tht U.S. Court of Appeals sustained the FPC's $1.42 price, and proposed a formula that would sweeten the price for "new" natural gas to $1.75.

Even that didn't satisfy the industry, so Sen. Henry M. Jackson made an abortive attempt to avert a deregulation vote in the Senate with a proposal for $2.03 per thousand cubic feet, and a more gtnerous interpretation of "new" gas. The price would rise to $3.36 in 1985, with full deregulation in 1987. How utterly ridiculous can this get?

A high administration official dealing with energy matters, who saw the turn of the tide some weeks ago, put it this way:

"THE MORAL imperative for American business is to maximize profits. Natural gas is no exception. You just go over the debates over the years. Give us 35 cents, that's all we want, they said. Give us 50 cents. Last year, they said a dollar will produce all the gas you want. Now, at a $1.75, for the shallow deposits, the incentives are just overwhelming . . .

"The incentives are so damn great that the producers are bidding one against the other for drill rigs, for steel, for trained manpower, for leases."

There was a time when the administration thought the industry couldn't turn down a price between $1.75 and $2.00 because the profits would be so great.

But the natural gas industry isn't satisfied. It's had the deregulation bug ever since President Nixon planted the idea, and now sees no reason why it shouldn't get the OPEC equivalent, and with that a transfer of some $10 billion annually from consumers to the gas producers. Who knows — the OPEC oil price one day may be $25 per barrel.

The massive increase in the price of oil from around $2 to $3 a barrel in 1972 and 1973 to $13 or $14 a barrel today, as many officials have once again concluded, created unmanageable financial problems. It has led to massive debt, to deflation, and most currently, a serious worldwide flirtation with protectionism.

The price of oil is today's key issue, and everyone talks about it merely in whispers, fretful of the impact on the Middle East politics. The world today appears to be concerned more with the fear of an empty gas tank than with moral attitudes. But having let OPEC dictate this country's oil prices, it would be criminal if we let OPEC dictate natural gas prices as well.

Editor's note: Hobart Rowen will be on vacation for the next two weeks.

Moneywise

by Robert Edwards

I have a retirement annuity worth about $5,300. I have been advised that I can take an annuity with two-thirds of the amount continuing for my husband if I should pre-decease him. Friends advise me to take the lump sum and buy certificates of deposit. What should I do?

—J.P.

You would be liable for some income tax on your annuity if you took it in a lump sum. Averaging could reduce this tax to little or nothing. Because an annuity uses up part of the principal to pay monthly income, you would receive less in monthly payments from the lump sum invested in certificates of deposit. You did not indicate the amount of the monthly annuuity, but it is less than an individual annuity because you elected a survivor benefit. Certificates paying 7¾ per cent would yield about $34 monthly. However, this plan would not touch the principal, and the interest from the CDs would continue until both you and your husband died. At the second person's death no residual remains for an estate from the annuity. You could elect to take small amounts of principal along with the interest to increase spendable income to leave a minimum amount of principal.

We have about $8,500 set aside for our son's college expenses — mostly in one-year certificates of deposit in my name as trustee for him as a minor. He plans to wait a year or two before returning to college. He is at an age where we can no longer use this form of account with its tax benefits. Assuming it will be at least a year before we begin drawing on these funds, what is the wisest investment?

—Mrs. V.R.

Your letter is not clear on the way your son's college fund is established. If you managed the CDs as custodian for your son under the Uniform Gift to Minors Act, the funds no longer belong to you. You made a gift to a minor; when a minor reaches maturity, the funds are his. If you established a short-term (10-year) trust with yourself as trustee, you need change nothing, as your son's age does not affect the trust. If you did neither of these, then I don't see how you gained tax benefits. Assuming you gave the funds to your son and acted as custodian, keeping the funds in one-year CDs is a reasonable investment — but he will have to include the interest as part of his income for tax purposes — not yours.

If one leaves an estate of about $200,000 and has designated in a will that one-quarter of the estate is to go to a church, would the one-fourth be deducted before calculating the estate tax, thus eliminating the estate tax if one lives until 1981?

—L.M.

Yes. Unlike the 20 to 50 per cent limitation on deductions for contributions to churches or charitable organizations when figuring income taxes, there is no limit on contributions for decreasing the taxable estate.

My husband and I are retired with income from Social Security, a pension, and about $1,800 yearly from dividends from a growth stock and a utility. Should be consider replacing the growth stock with CDs or other investment for more income? My husband is reluctant to change due to the expense of selling and rebuying plus the capital gains tax on the shares. Stocks are readily sold if we needed cash, but should we have CDs or bonds to increase our income?

—Mrs. S.B.

I presume you and your husband are over 65. If so, you could convert blocks of the growth stock each year without incurring income tax by offsetting the gain with your double exemptions and other deductions. The growth tock is yielding about 5¼ per cent. Selling and rebuying an income stock paying 8½ per cent would allow you to break even in about a year and a half. Roundtrip costs would be about 4 per cent. I suggest keeping the utility stock,as it is paying just under 8 per cent. Certificates of deposit would yield up to 7¾ per cent and would avoid acquisition costs of 2 per cent, but your money is locked in for 6 years. I would avoid buying bonds for now. Gradually converting the growth stock to income stock would increase income, hopefully as fast as inflation.

Stevenson delighted show renewed

By Randy Shipp

Parker Stevenson, co-star of ABC's "The Hardy Boys Mysteries," starts his day at 6:30 a.m. and usually works till about 7 p.m. Most people, with that kind of schedule, would probably find some leisurely activity to occupy their spare time. But next season, if Stevenson has his way, his spare time will be devoted to graduate business courses.

Such a combination of activities won't be entirely new to him, however. During his undergraduate days at Princeton, he acted in several commercials, as well as starring in three movies: "A Separate Peace," "Our Time," and "Lifeguard."

"I've always had a wide variety of interests," said Parker Stevenson. "Even in school I found it difficult to concentrate in just one area — though I have always wanted to be an architect. One thing that I especially like about an acting career is that, because of the schedule, I usually have time to pursue other interests as well."

He thought for a moment, then added, "You know, basically I'm a very easy-going person, but I always have to be involved with something." He paused, frowned. "Does that sound like a contradiction?"

It might to some, but it's a natural description of Parker Stevenson. While he is casual and open, he yet has an enthusiasm and vitality that is refreshing.

"I don't know how you found out I was interested in photography," he said as we walked into the living room of his New York City apartment, "but I'm really glad you did." The next several minutes were spent thumbing through some marvelous photos that justified his enthusiasm for the art. Although he claims his specialty is scenes and compositions rather than portraits, one of his favorite shots was that of a not-so-stately swan caught in the act of preening its feathers.

Another, taken on board a train in southern France, showed a father holding his four-year-old daughter, dressed in her best clothes, sprawled sound asleep in his lap. After we had gazed at the photo silently for several seconds he put it away and said quietly, "I though you might like it. It is kind of nice."

"The Hardy Boys and Nancy Drew Mysteries" has been renewed for next season, and Parker Stevenson is delighted.

"Actually," Stevenson said, with a grin, "I didn't find out about it myself until I read it in "The New York Times." Rumors were rampant that the show was going to be axed, but reports showed a steadily climbing audience appeal, and ABC's President of Entertainment, Fred Silverman, decided to go with the series.

"We're scheduled to do at least two two-hour specials, Stevenson added. "We may even have an episode with the Hardy Boys and Nancy Drew teaming up to solve a mystery. That could be an interesting show."

Although he loves the series and is very proud of his accomplishments in it, he does have some worries. "Frank Hardy can be a dangerous role. It's easy to be typecast . . . I'm hoping to do some other things when we're on hia[illegible] — maybe some TV movies. I'd also like to get in on the production end of things at some point." He shrugged. "Who knows? Maybe the business courses would help with that."

Did he have any specific projects in mind? "No. There are a couple books I've been reading lately that I think I might enjoy doing, but there's so much involved that it'll be a long way off."

Stevenson is wary of the privileges he receives as a successful actor. "For me," he said candidly, "the greatest challenge has to be special treatment. People are very willing to pamper you and treat you with kid gloves — especially when you're in a television series. Granted, a lot of it is just because they hope you can do something for them. But, if you're not careful, you can find yourself really taking advantage of people."

Parker Stevenson, plays the older brother Frank, in "Hardy Boys Mysteries," at 6 p.m. Sunday on Channel 7.

Somehow, one gets the feeling that Parker Stevenson is well able to meet that challenge. The Hollywood star treatment hasn't touched his sense of perspective or humor.

Denise Miller

T.M.

Denise, who portrays the sly Jilly on "Fish," is a native of Brooklyn. Although she had previously appeared on "Barney Miller" and in several commercials, her first major TV role was in "Fish." The 5-foot-tall brunette, whose "passion" is acting, has other interests, too--photography, swimming, horseback riding and tennis, to name a few.

J.M.

Mr. Long had a long list of acting credits before his death in December, 1974. He appeared in over 25 movies ("Criss Cross" and "Dark Mirror" to name a couple) before his television debut in "Climax!" His record includes performances in "Reader's Digest," "Lux Video Theater," "Schlitz Playhouse" and "The Millionaire." Later he played Ernie Paine in "Thicker Than Water" and Jarrod Barkley in "The Big Valley." He also made several guest appearances in such shows as "Lawman," "Sugarfoot," "Love, American Style" and "Password."

Richard Long

Lulu Roman

Could you please tell me where I could write to Lulu Roman of "Hee Haw"?

M.M.

Write to lovely Lulu (as well as the rest of the "Hee Haw" cast) in care of ICPR, 8th Floor, 9255 Sunset Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif., 90069

In the movie "One on One," who was the actress who played Robby Benson's girlfriend, and where can I write to her? I think she's beautiful and very talented.

J.S.

Try writing to Annette O'Toole in care of Warner Brothers Studios, 4000 Warner Blvd., Burbank, Calif. 90069.

Editor's note . . .

Fall is the time to see the prairies. The sunflowers, asters and goldenrods are blazing in autumn colors, the tall, tough grasses change hues and the brisk breezes that ripple the landscape bring visions of a time of Indians and determined settlers. Little original prairie land remains in this state but a fine example is Goose Lake in Grundy County about twenty-five miles southwest of Joliet. Page 6.

If you've never been to the cramped, somewhat shoddy Near North Side theaters in Chicago, don't pretend to know 'the theatre.' If you've never sat through a side-splitting comedy at St. Nicholas or a poignant drama at Victory Gardens, you haven't seen it all. These small professional companies are injecting new life into Chicago culture and capturing audiences (and awards) with their freshness and talent. Page 4.

Everyone — well almost — is looking for a bargain and what could be more of a bargain than an $89 flight to the West Coast. Travel editor Katherine Rodeghier has planned two trips to California that make only small dents in the wallet. Page 10.

THE OFF-BROADWAY OF CHICAGO

by Scott Fosdick

Several years ago one could dismiss Chicago's off-Loop theater scene as a small backwater of fervent novices performing experimental works in the storefronts and warehouses of the North Side.

But not today. The experiments worked, and theory quickly became doctrine. Novices turned pro, the children of the sixties grew up, and the tiny backwater swelled until it became a raging torrent.

Some say the North Side is now more mainstream than the Loop itself, in artistic achievement if not in ticket sales. Statistics are hard to come by, and many off-Loop theater companies still die as quickly as they are born. But by the sheer number of acting companies alive at any one moment, the off-Loop movement far outdistances the traditional Loop theaters.

Many are undoubtedly unfamiliar with the significant, but largely unpublicized changes that have taken place in the Chicago theater community in the past several years. To them, much of the above must read like some futuristic fantasy. So let's get down to basics: What is off-Loop?

To those on the inside, determining whether a theater is off-Loop is child's play. Actually defining the term is much harder. It isn't simply a matter of location or age, and the off-Loop group isn't the kind of club that keeps a roster. Because of its size, and the here-today-gone-tomorrow nature of the beast, it is probably easier to list what are not off-Loop theaters than to list those that are. Moreover, one can't fully understand the alternative theater movement without knowing what it is an alternative to.

The Drury Lane theaters (often referred to as "Dreary Lane") are not part of the movement. Nor are any of the dinner theaters. Suburban groups don't make it — they're too off-Loop. The large downtown houses that import traveling shows from New York do not belong (and don't want to, either). Most importantly, the 52-year-old Goodman Theatre is on the outside.

That's it. All the Chicago theaters not on that list — the Organic, St. Nicholas, Victory Gardens, to name a few of the more stable ones — belong in the off-Loop category.

If you care about the state of the Arts in Chicago, you should feel a vague depression coming on just about now. There's something disheartening in all of this. Excepting the off-Loop theaters that have sprung up in the past decade, the nation's second largest city has very little serious theater to offer. Take away the off-Loop movement, and there would be only one professional company left downtown: the Goodman. And even it does its casting in New York.

Ah, New York. Now it has been said. It's just about impossible to get through a discussion on theater without some mention of that city. And when the discussion is on Chicago theater, New York can only be invoked with envious whimpers.

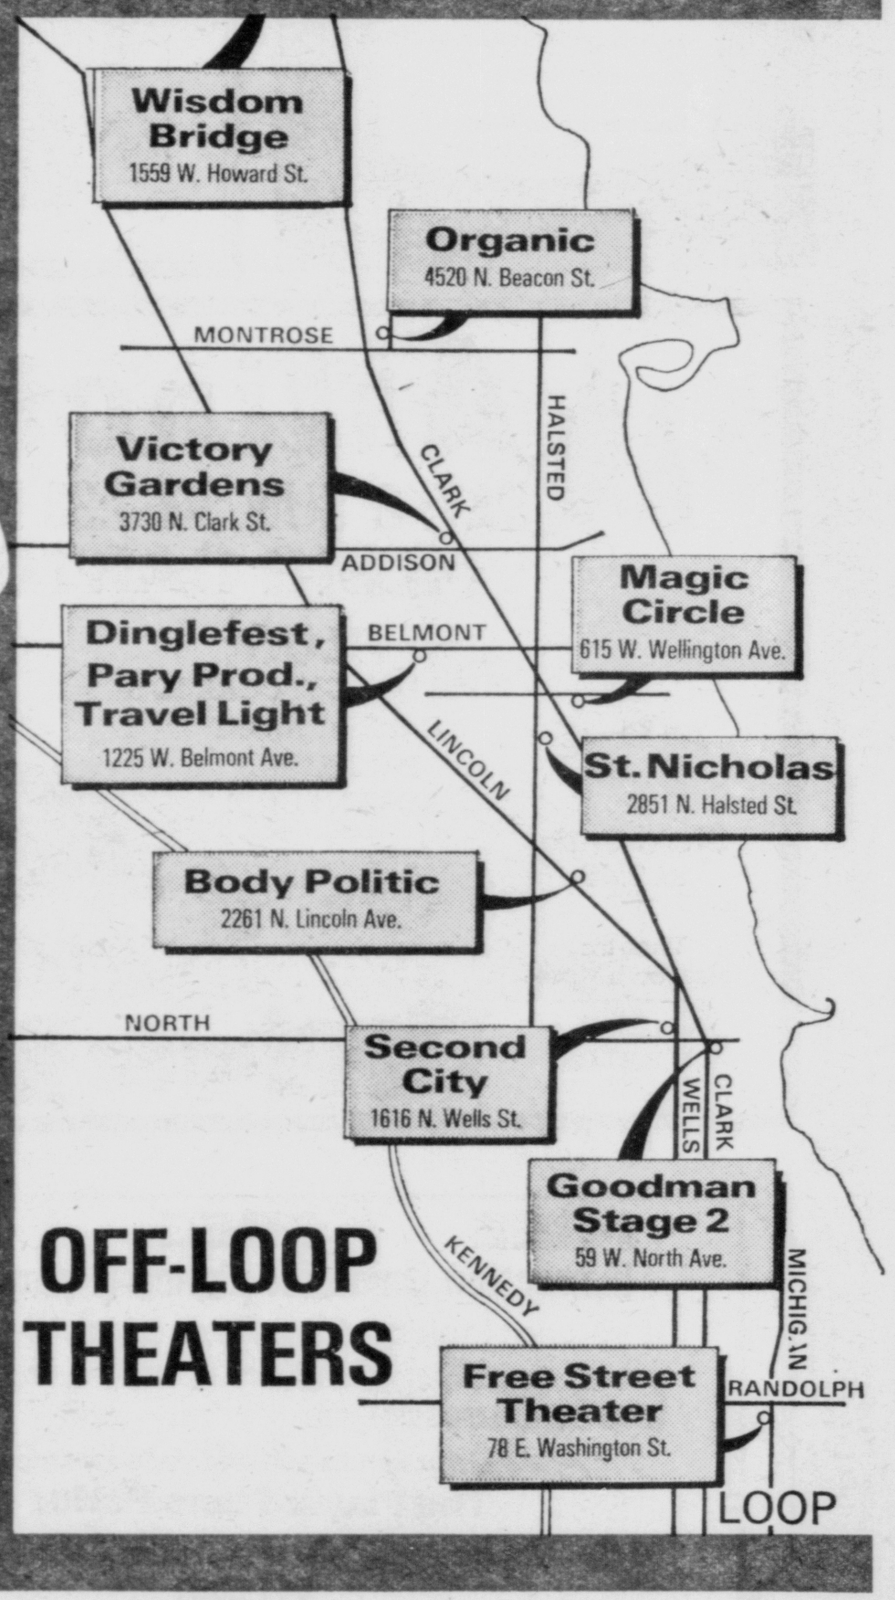
The 9.7 million persons in its metropolitan area make New York the largest city in the most entertainment oriented country in the world. So it's not surprising The Great White Way is so bright. But Chicago has a metropolitan population of over 7 million. Shouldn't we have a Broadway 70 per cent as bright as New York's?

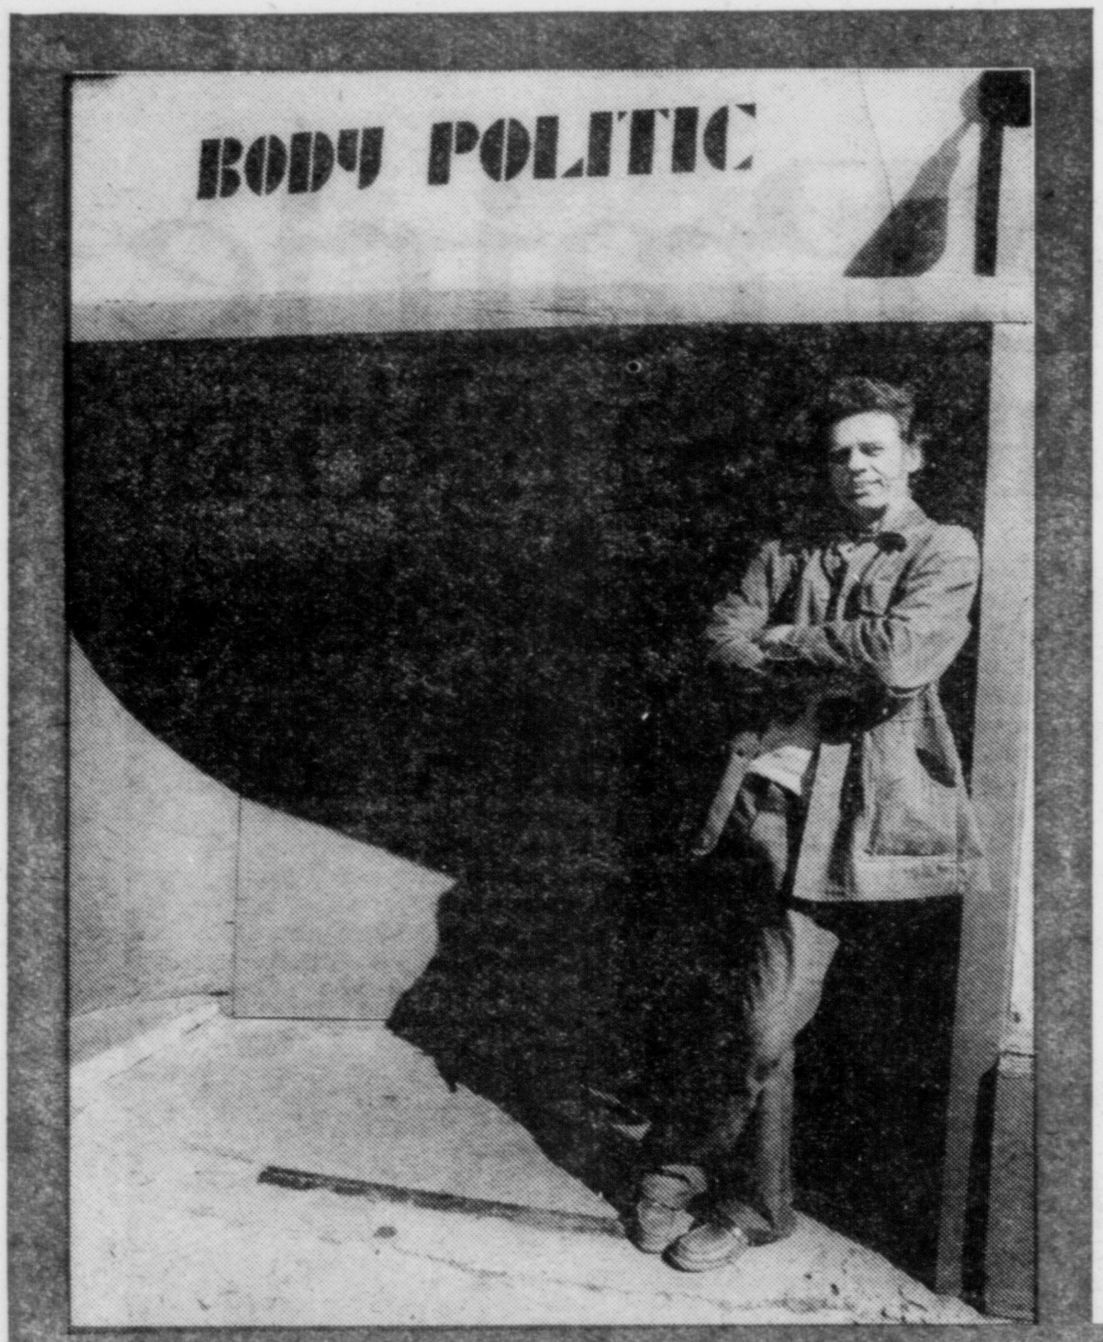
We did, once. Before movies and television came along, Chicago sent as many shows to Broadway as it received. At the turn of the century, Chicago had more than twenty-five giant playhouses. Of these, only three — the Studebaker, Blackstone and Shubert — remain as playhouses.

Some blame this decline on the lack of state arts funding; others blame it on city politics. But eventually, it all comes down to the bottom line: ticket sales.

Chicagoans spend less on theater than the residents of every other city in the country

Those small Near North Side companies with the strange sounding names are producing some of the best, most dynamic theater in the city.





Opposite page: A delightful but inconsequential bit of fluff, "June Moon" is being staged at the small but mighty Victory Gardens on the Near North Side.

Top of page: Bob Shiflett founded the Body Politic theater on Lincoln Avenue in 1969 and is now executive director of the Community Arts Foundation, Body Politic's parent organization.

Above: Steven Schachter and Patricia Cox were among the Vermont college students that started the St. Nicholas Theater three years ago. No seat in the house is more than 25 feet from the stage, typical of the off-Loop theaters.

for which statistics are available. The average metropolitan Chicago resident spends $1.07 a year on theater, compared to Los Angeles residents, $3.15, and New Yorkers, $14.10. It is this lack of a public, more than anything else, that has dampened the theater scene here.

How did we get this way?

Peter Jacobi, a professor of journalism at Northwestern University, feels the paucity of theater is a result of Chicago's national image. The New York stage is, to a large extent, supported by tourists. It is not entirely accurate to say the average New Yorker spends $14.10 a year on theater, a figure derived by comparing ticket receipts to population, because an untold number of those tickets are bought by people who aren't from New York.

Chicago is popular as a convention center, Jacobi says. People don't often come here for a cultural weekend.

"New York is an international city; Chicago is an American city."

There are signs that image may be changing, however, The statistics were taken from a 1972 United States Dept. of Commerce census, and the situation has changed enormously since then. (The next census won't be out until next year.) While the popularity of the New York stage has declined, Chicago's off-Loop theaters have multiplied again and again, with current estimates of their number ranging from 20 to 80.

Quality and dependability have also improved. Each year the off-Loop theaters are nominated for more and more of the city's coveted Jeff Awards. (This year the off-Loop theaters received a majority of the nominations, but at this week's Ninth Annual ceremony they came up with disappointingly few actual awards.)

Jacobi, a member of the Joseph Jefferson committee that makes the nominations and picks the winners, has a judge's dislike for overstatement: "It's going very well," is all he'll say of the off-Loop movement.

Though peopled with refugees of the sixties, the off-Loop theaters have their roots in the fifties and Paul Sills.

Sills founded the Playwrights Theater Club on LaSalle and North streets in 1953. Playwrights Theater did the classics, and at this time it was the only professional theater using local talent in Chicago.

Sills' first venture didn't last long. The city closed down Playwright's Theater the next year, after lengthy court battles. "In those days it was illegal to have a small theater," Sills explains. He built his later theaters with bars; they were easier to license that way.

In 1955, Sills and David Shepard opened The Compass on 55th Street. It was here that Sills started the first improvisational group, forging what became known as "the Chicago style." It was here, too, that comedians Mike Nichols, Elaine May, and Shelley Berman got their starts. After a move, The Compass also died.

Sills started Second City in 1959 with Howard Alk and Bernie Sahlins, who still owns it. A stewpot for such comedic talents as Alan Alda and John Belushi, "Second City" drew national attention with its perfection of the improvisational technique. It is still on North Wells and it is still funny, though its once outlandish style now seems a bit dated. And it still turns a pretty profit, unlike most of the North Side theaters, which are not-for-profit.

Sills left Second City in 1969 to found a theater on Lincoln Avenue, Body Politic, with money from Mike Nichols. At about the same time, June Pyskacek formed the Kingston Mines theater across the street.

The birth of Body Politic and Kingston Mines marks the real beginning of the burgeoning North Side scene. The New Town head shops, bars, book stores and restaurants that now stretch from Old Town to Uptown were all sparked on this once barren stretch of Lincoln Avenue.

The brand of theater at these two Lincoln Avenue houses — intimate, energetic, partisan, and yet diverse — set a rhythm still followed by today's off-Loop theaters.

Before Kingston Mines metamorphosed into its present state as a blues bar, it gave flight to "Grease," a musical spoof on the fifties that took Broadway by storm.

Body Politic, still firmly ensconced on Lincoln Avenue, has housed numerous companies as well as one-shot productions. Sills early on made a name for the place with "Story Theater," a series of skits and adaptations of Grimm's fairy tales which he took to Broadway for an incredible nine-month run.

After "Story Theater" Sills left Chicago to found a company in Milwaukee. He now lives in ease in Door County, Wisconsin, jetting to New York now and then to direct shows.

Sills may have left a flower in mid-bloom, but the off-Loop scene continued to flourish nonetheless with the influx of new talent, and the rapid improvement of old.

Take the case of Stuart Gordon, the roly-poly Prince of Uptown. Raised on the West Side, he returned to Chicago in 1970 after being chased out of Madison, Wisconsin, for staging a nude version of "Peter Pan." He brought with him a loyal troupe of actors and a name, Organic Theater. They got their start at the Body Politic building, and soon had enough of a following to lease their own 150-seat theater at the Hull House Center in the heart of Uptown.

Throughout its history the Organic has remained unique. It uses the same small group of actors show after show, making it the only true "company" in the city. It is also the only theater in the city that consistently draws full houses, with fantasies like Kurt Vonnegut's "The Sirens of Titan," and its recent portrait of rabid Cub fans, "Bleacher Bums." The latter, like most of their shows, was created from scratch by the company.

In 1972 Gordon collaborated with Bury St. Edmund (alias Lenny Kleinfeld) to write the company's most famous sci-fi play, "Warp." The show was a hit here, but died after two dismal weeks on Broadway. Since then the Organic has toured Europe twice, and is now touring California.

Despite his success at the small Hull House theater, Gordon apparently has the seven-year itch. With the backing of the Borg-Warner Corporation, he is presently organizing a syndicate of private investors to loan the Organic the money to buy a building at Buckingham and Clark, and convert it into a 450-seat theater at a cost of $825,000. The deal may still fall through, but if it doesn't, this peculiar alliance of the counter-culture and the business community will set a valuable precedent for the off-Loop theaters.

Another off-Loop theater going through changes - but in the other direction — is Victory Gardens, located in the sprawling old Northside Auditorium Building on Clark Street, a short fly ball from Wrigley Field.

Founded in 1974 by eight local artists (including Gordon and Pyskacek), Victory Gardens has been a dependable showcase for Chicago playwrights. Three months ago, however, then-owner Daniel Johnston sold the building without warning to entrepreneur Chuck Renslow, who is converting the main 300-seat theater into a disco palace (due to open any day now). Renslow seems to have inherited the actors with the building. Rather than turning them out, he helped renovate Victory Gardens' smaller 150-seat theater, and lowered their rent considerably. The theater's management is trying to make the best of the situation, but it remains to be

Goose Lake Prairie

Photography by Craig Camp

The tall grasses and delicate wildflowers of the remaining Illinois prairielands beckon visitors to return to the days when Indians roamed the plains.

by Clarisse Ritter

Have you ever had to look up to see a blade of grass?

Has the wind ever rustled about you whispering unintelligible invitations to explore nature as it really is?

Have you ever shivered at your own mortality while recognizing the fullness of God's earth?

Have you ever stood in awe of the simple rustic beauty of wild flowers against the horizon?

There is a place only sixty miles from the Northwest suburbs where you can experience those feelings and commune with nature in a way only known to native Americans of years past and the first settlers to the grassy plains of Illinois.

Goose Lake Prairie Nature Preserve in Grundy County, six miles east of Morris is one of fifty-nine preserves totaling 15,341 acres in the "Prairie State."

The 1,513 acres at Goose Lake are special. Conservationists will tell you it is part of the Grand Prairie Section of the Grand Prairie Division. Simply, it is one of the last sections of prairie in Illinois. It is also one of the largest tall-grass prairies in North America, making it significant to conservationists and ecologists.

Goose Lake's vegetation has been studied and perused by experts from across the nation. To the visitor it is a breathtaking look at a bygone era. To the autumn visitor, it is a close look at Nature's work which rivals the beauty of forests alive with vibrant hue.

Goose Lake offers those of us weaned on six-lane highways, a gravel hiking path through the tall-grass prairie and gives us an eye-level view of prairie plants.

Look up, sometimes six or seven feet, and see switchgrass. One of the most common native prairie grasses, switchgrass grows in moist soil. It is easily recognized because its stem is slightly bent at the stem joints. As autumn draws near, the medium green plant turns reddish brown and seeds cling to plant with thread-like delicacy.

Towering over switchgrass is prairie cordgrass. Reaching heights of eight to twelve feet, this plant is one of the most conspicuous grasses at Goose Lake. Small "teeth" resembling the edge of a saw are characteristic of the edge of this plant's leaf. Visitors are warned that the leaf can cause a painful cut.

Because it is a wet prairie plant, prairie cordgrass can withstand prolonged periods of rain during spring and then live on through the dry spells of summer and fall. Often seen near prairie cordgrass are blue vervain, hedge nettle, swamp milkweed and water hemlock.

Also found at Goose Lake are cord grass, Canada wild rye, big blue stem, blue joint, grama sideoats, little blue stem grass, prairie dropseed and Indiangrass.

Visitors to Goose Lake are supplied with guide pamphlets explaining the grasses' characteristics and depicting the plants to aid in recognizing them.

The value of traveling to Goose Lake becomes clear when we realize much of Illinois looked like Goose Lake before the land was cleared by farmers. It is yesterday growing today.

To those whose only experience with native plants has been pulling them out of a garden spot or from around a puddle of water, a pleasant surprise is in store.

The ragged look of a congregation of weeds is not what to expect at Goose Lake. The grasses are usually found in clumps (called stands). It is these grasses and the broadleaf flowering plants (called forbs) that qualify the area to be designated a prairie. By and large, these plants come up every year. Their roots are reported to live for decades or sometimes centuries in deep soil.

The stable neighborhood of grasses at Goose Lake is estimated to be 10,000 years old.

Casting your eyes up over the horizon at Goose Lake provides you with a mixed feeling of past and present. Somewhere on the north horizon stands an old wooden windmill. Further in the distance stands the steel structure of the Dresden Nuclear Power Plant and General Electric Fuel Recovery Plant. The Dresden site stands where the Des Plaines and Kankakee rivers join two and a half miles from the prairie.

Standing in the midst of prairie, looking first at the windmill and then at the power plant leaves the visitor no doubt as to his role as time marches forward, unsympathetic to man's attempts to stop or save it.

But there is more to this vast prairie than grasses. Lance-leaved goldenrod, partially fuzzy from autumn's frost, joins the saw-toothed sunflower, the New England Aster, the wooly sunflower and groves of heath aster. The untamed beauty of the wild flowers surrounds the visitor. The little beauties are spirited, standing fast against the seemingly ever present wind that whips across the prairie.

As you look searchingly across the prairie, do not be surprised if you feel something looking back.

Goose Lake provides a home for many birds including the Myrtle warbler, Eastern kingbird, white-throated sparrow, catbird, red-tailed hawk, sparrow hawk, barred owl and marsh hawk.

And still there is more.

The cottontail rabbit, meadow vole and muskrat quietly make their home among the tall grasses. Conservationists say the white-tailed deer and coyote also may be found at Goose Lake. Consider yourself lucky if you spot one, for they are masters at observing you in the quiet tradition of the best hunter.

There is a developed hiking trail at Goose Lake and the park is open year round. When weather conditions close the park roads, access to the park is allowed on foot only.

To be certain, Goose Lake is one of nature's wonders carefully controlled by ecologists. But it also is a historical site, ripe with stories of the days when Indians dwelled there.

Early tribes of mound-building Indians lived where Goose Lake Prairie is now located. Hunting reportedly included buffalo, and prairie chicken. Mounds just south of the Illinois River were discovered by Morris settlers.

Goose Lake Prairie is alive with history and nature and a rugged beauty preserved for those who want to visit yesterday.

HOW TO SHOP FOR A MATTRESS

1. Pay attention to all the radio and TV ads by the big name manufacturers. Each one will tell you what famous medical group or orthopedic society or surgical committee designed that particular mattress.

2. Go to a retail store and find the famous Bleepy "This A Pedic" or the Blurpo "Bumpy Rest" and poke it with your fingers. Use all four fingers because you can't really tell how it feels by poking with just two fingers.

3. By all means do not lie down on it because you might be a little embarrassed to have people see you lying on a mattress in a real store. Besides, that way you can get a bigger surprise the first time you try to sleep on it. Anyway, if it's one of those Pedic kinds, the salesman would probably just as soon you wouldn't find out how hard it really is.

4. Don't act shocked when the salesman tells you the King size set is only $500.00. After all, the super deluxe model is only $50.00 or $100.00 or more.

5. Before you make a final decision, go to the Schaumburg Mattress Factory. We have a small showroom in the front of the factory, and we want our customers to lie down on our comfortable mattresses. And if you just happen to doze off for awhile, we won't even bother you — until closing time of course.

'Off-Broadway':

seen how such close proximity to a gay disco will affect ticket sales.

The current sweetheart of the off-Loop stage is a small company in a small theater with no plans to move: St. Nicholas. Founded the same year as Victory Gardens, this company has in three years developed a reputation as the most intense, thought-provoking group in town.

The main force behind this success is founding member and playwright in residence David Mamet, perhaps the hottest young playwright in America. he first became known as the author of the Organic's "Sexual Perversity in Chicago." More recently, Mamet received national attention for "American Buffalo," which opened here in 1975 before going to Broadway, where it won this year's New York Drama Critics' Award for best new play.

There are many more playwrights and dozens more companies. There were 218 plays that opened in Chicago last year, according to the Chicago Alliance for the Performing Arts. Of these, thirty-four were world premieres, most of them written by Chicago playwrights and performed by off-Loop companies — companies with weird, whimsical names like Magic Circle, Wisdom Bridge, Travel Light, and Dinglefest.

Is all this talk about an "off-Loop movement" just blatant boosterism, or does the North Side really present a valid alternative to the more traditional Loop theaters?

The hits that opened on Broadway eighteen months ago are generally tired and hackneyed by the time they play the Shubert, the Blackstone or the Studebaker; whatever spirit of adventure they once had is often gone. What is more, their reputations are established. It takes great self-confidence, or force of will, to ignore all the advance publicity and take each performance for what it is.

The Goodman does much better with its revivals of the classics, and now it's starting to turn to more modern material in an attempt to capture some of the North Side's new audience. Three years ago it began a special "Stage 2" series of contemporary plays. In its second season, Stage 2 jointly produced Mamet's "American Buffalo" with St. Nicholas at the St. Nicholas theater. This year, Stage 2 walked off with the major Jeff Awards for its production of "Sizwe Bansi is Dead," a story of apartheid in South Africa.

What with Stage 2, and with an occasional modern play creeping into its main stage, the Goodman is losing its stodgy reputation. But one gets the feeling at the Goodman that when it puts on an experimental or avant garde play, it is doing it because some business manager sat down and said, "It would be a smart move now to do an experimental or avant garde play" — not because it's in the interests of good theater.

Chicago theater doesn't have to be a partisan affair. You needn't limit yourself to either Loop or off-Loop theaters. If Chicago is ever doing to do battle with Broadway, it's going to need all its cannons. Right now the most potent cannons are on the North Side.

Not all off-Loop theater is fresh, dynamic and honest. There's no telling from season to season which companies will die and which will suddenly produce a string of masterpieces. There's only one way to judge the off-Loop scene: See it for yourself. Its mercurial character produces a few bizarre failures, but it also makes for some exhilarating successes. §

by Katherine Rodeghier

By now you have no doubt heard about those new "super coach" fares to San Diego and Los Angeles.

For as little as $89 you can fly one way to L.A. on a number of daily flights from O'Hare and for just $10 more you can buy a one-way ticket to San Diego. Four airlines are now competing in the super coach market — Trans World Airlines, United Airlines, American Airlines and Continental Airlines — all of which offer the special fares to Los Angeles. American and United offer super coach fares to San Diego.

The super coach fare is not as low as the lowest charter flight but the beauty of it is you don't have to stick to those sometimes sticky charter regulations. You plan your own schedule, leave when you can, stay as long as you desire and return at your convenience. All you need do is be willing to go without a meal to get the lowest fare and book your flight as far in advance as possible to assure that you get a bargain seat.

OK, so you're sold on the idea. Those billboards and television commercials have finally convinced you that the Coast is the place to go for your next getaway.

But what will you do when you get there?

Plenty. Both areas offer an overwhelming variety of things to see and do — sightseeing, cultural attractions, fine restaurants and good entertainment. In fact, there's so much to do that it's difficult to decide just where to begin.

The two destinations are quite different. The San Diego area makes for a quiet, relaxing vacation — picturesque scenery, strolls in Balboa Park and the zoo. It seems that almost everyone makes a trip south of the border to Tijuana. L.A. on the other hand, is glitter city, tinsel town, a city filled with "in" — fashionable avenues, theaters, bars and restaurants where one goes to see and be seen. And it seems that many people who make the trip to L.A. have a tendency to wander into Orange County to spend a day at Disneyland.

What follows is a day by day itinerary designed to help you make the most of a 3-day weekend for two in each city. The creation of these lists of attractions, restaurants, hotels and theaters was purely subjective so feel free to map out your own itinerary suited to your particular tastes.

For instance, you may want more time for swimming and sunbathing, or maybe you would like to spend an entire afternoon shopping, perhaps you'd like more nightlife and less sightseeing, or maybe you're planning to bring the kids along which opens up another set of options.

In planning this itinerary I tried to keep to the middle of the road pricewise and still stick with the kinds of attractions that appeal to most tourists. You can do your 3-day weekend for less money but you can also do it for considerably more. You can stay at the fanciest "uptown" hotel or you can check into one of those small budget motels on the edge of town.

For information on the Los Angeles area contact: The Greater Los Angeles Visitors and Convention Bureau, 505 S. Flower St., Los Angeles, Calif. 90071, phone 213-488-9100.

For information on the San Diego area contact: Convention and Visitor's Bureau, 1200 Third Ave., San Diego, Calif., phone 714-232-3101.

Downtown Los Angeles greets visitors.

FRIDAY

Hurry, we're going away! And L.A. is just the type pf place to get away to for a fun-filled weekend.

Land at Los Angeles International Airport, pick up a rental car and drive out to the Sheraton Town Inn on Wilshire Boulevard just west of the downtown area. Check in, unpack, get dressed and go. Head for the Atlantic Richfield Plaza in Downtown Los Angeles for the first of three nights out on the town.

The Plaza is the newest downtown shopping area in L.A. and it is also the world's largest subterranean shopping center with more than fifty shops nestled underneath the world headquarters for Atlantic Richfield Company and the Los Angeles base for Bank of America. You'll arrive in time to do some window shopping to check out the latest in West Coast fashions but your real destination is on Level C — a pub called O'Shaughnessy's. After an Irish supper of corned beef and cabbage or Irish stew take part in the typical Friday night revelry at O'Shaughnessy's — sing-a-longs and other such shennanigans.

SATURDAY

Well it was a late night last night but try to roll out of bed in time to drive out to the Farmer's Market where you can breakfast on some fresh strawberries and cream available in one of the food stalls here.

The world renowned Farmers Market in Los Angeles.

The Farmer's Market began during the Depression when hard-pressed farmers set up stalls to sell surplus crops. Today the market is a popular spot with the "in crowd." Entirely open in front, the market has some 160 individual businesses including dining patios and terrace cafes. And because it is located next to CBS Studios it's a great place for people watching. Many a star has been known to walk over to the market for a yogurt snack.

Another great place for people watching is Rodeo Drive in nearby Beverly Hills. Stroll along the drive just to see and be seen during a typical Saturday morning shopping spree in this posh community of stars. This is where the celebrities shop so keep your

Scenic San Diego offers more than a zoo

FRIDAY

Just as soon as you can get out of the office we head for O'Hare and arrive in San Diego in the late afternoon or early evening (don't forget that 2-hour time difference). After collecting your bags and picking up the rental car drive up to Mission Bay to the Hilton Inn. If there's time after checking in and unpacking and what not you might take a stroll along the bay or have a swim in the hotel pool. Have a fashionably late dinner at the hotel with cocktails and dancing afterward in the lounge.

SATURDAY

Wake up early and have breakfast at the hotel before starting out on San Diego's 52-mile scenic drive. The auto route, marked every quarter mile or so by a blue, yellow and white sign depicting a sea gull, forms a sort of crazy figure-eight through the San Diego area. Since most of the city's scenic attractions are located along this route it's a good introduction to San Diego.

Let's begin on the southern loop heading southwest from Mission Bay driving along the ocean front by the Sunset Cliffs. It's a terrific view of the Pacific where the ocean breaks against the craggy cliffs and nearby is Ocean Beach Pier, the longest sportfishing pier on the Pacific coast.

Drive out along a peninsula until we reach Point Loma and the Cabrillo National Monument. It's the most southwesterly point in the continental United States and the place where explorer Juan Rodriquez Cabrillo landed in 1542 and discovered the west coast of California. From December to mid-February this spot is a good vantage point for watching the annual migration of gray whales.

The main feature of the Cabrillo monument is the old lighthouse which dates back to 1855. The inside is furnished with period furniture and there's also a visitor center, a museum and slide and film programs.

Next, retrace our route back up the peninsula but this time turn and drive east around San Diego Harbor. San Diego Bay is an excellent harbor 14 miles long and up to 2 miles wide. This is one of the prime recreation areas in the city and resort centers are found on Harbor Island and Polynesian-like Shelter Island. The harbor and embarcadero area are lined with fine hotels and restaurants. Stop at Lubach's for lunch and maybe you can get a table with a view of the bay.

After lunch make a quick swing through downtown San Diego before heading north to Balboa Park. You will be returning here on another day so just for now simply take note of the Spanish-Moorish architecture, the gardens, lawns, flowers, subtropical plants and the ponds in this 1,400-acre park located almost in the center of the city. It's twice the size of New York's famed Central Park.

Continue north to the old section of the city in the presidio area. Old Town San Diego is a 200-year-old community surrounded by the modern city. This is where California began. Stop here and walk around a bit. A green line painted in the street leads to historic landmarks but guided walking tours of the area are also available.

Old Town San Diego began as a small complex of low, abode buildings which grew around California's first mission, Mission San Diego de Alcala. When the mission moved up the valley in the late 1700s the Spanish soldiers, their families and servants remained on the hill next to the Presidio, or fort.

Today Old Town is a charming village of historic sites, quaint shops, galleries, museums and restaurants. Several of the settler's original buildings have been preserved and some are restored. Take time to go through the Serra Museum in Presidio Park where the first mission stood. The musuem contains many interesting artifacts and an archeological excavation is going on near by.

By now it's mid-afternoon, time to take a pleasant drive along the northern loop of the scenic route. Head north through Mission Bay Park up to Mount Soledad where you can stop for a spectacular view of the Pacific.

Drive over to the coast now to La Jolla, one of the area's most charming communities. It began as an exclusive resort community but La Jolla is now attracting professional people, artists and writers. There are dozens of small specialty shops perfect for browsing.

La Jolla is situated on a natural peninsula between Mount Soledad and the ocean eyes peeled for Gucci bags and Halston suits — you never know who might be behind those Foster Grants.

Get a map from a street vendor and drive around Beverly Hills to some of the homes of the stars. Jimmy Stewart and Lucille Ball live across the street from each other, and Alfred Hitchcock lives in Hitchcock-type house almost obscured by trees. All you can see of Johnny Carson's Bel Air home is his driveway.

Is all this activity making you hungry? Drive over to "the strip" in Hollywood and have lunch. The Scandia Restaurant on Sunset Boulevard looks like a good place.

After lunch visit Mann's Chinese Theater (used to be Grauman's) over on Holywood Boulevard. There was a time when this pagoda-like theater filled the California skies with search lights heralding the arrival of the stars for the opening of a new film. The footprints, handprints and signatures of more than 200 stars are imbedded in the theater's concrete patio. There's Shirley Temple, Liz Taylor, Gene Kelly, Cooper, Gable, Monroe and Garland. Some of the new additions are Elton John and Robert Redford.

You can't miss the Hollywood Wax Museum just down the street. It contains some 170 life-like figures of legendary people like Mother Goose and Jean Harlow, Clark Gable and W. C. Fields.

You can't dawdle too long, though, because the last tour of Universal Studios starts at 3:30.

Universal City is just northeast of Hollywood. The world's largest motion picture studio, Universal Studios has a massive back lot stretching over more than 420 acres with Western sets, Mexican villages and New York City brownstones. Each year more than three million visitors tour the studio.

Catch the last tour aboard the Universal Glamor Tram which winds through the studios on a 2½ hour tram ride. Tour guides point out Edith Head's offices and Lucille Ball's dressing room. The sets, many of them vaguely familiar, recall Universal's more than fifty years in the motion picture business. A highlight of the tour is the demonstration of special effects used in movie production. A bridge collapses under you, there's a runaway train and an avalanche to say nothing of the parting of the Red Sea. One of the newest stars is the mechanical shark from "Jaws." Stunt shows, a demonstration by a make-up artist and an exhibit of costumes from famous films round out the tour.

You have just enough time now to drive back to the hotel and dress for dinner and the theater. Tonight, be elegant. Dinner is at Francois' Restaurant in the Atlantic Richfield Plaza. Francois' is famous for superb French cuisine and wines in a setting reminiscent of a French chateau.

Pick up tickets for a production in the Los Angeles Music Center for the Performing Arts, the crown jewel of entertainment in downtown L.A. Established twenty years ago the center is today one of the finest music and dramatic arts centers in the United States.

After the theater say good night to the city with cocktails at the "Top of the Five," a revolving restaurant atop the new Bonaventure Hotel.

SUNDAY

After a quick breakfast at the hotel get ready for a change of pace today. Hop in the rental car and drive southeast into Orange County for a day at Disneyland in Anaheim, California.

Disneyland is a leading tourist attraction, not just in California, but America as well. In its twenty-two year history Disneyland has had nearly 160 million visitors, that's half the population of the United States. Among the notables who have toured Disneyland are the Emperor and Empress of

Los Angeles:

Japan, King Hussein of Jordan, Harry S. Truman, Richard Nixon, John F. Kennedy, the Shah of Iran and Haile Selassie.

Disneyland consists of more than fifty major attractions, thirty restaurants and fifty shops arranged in seven beautifully landscaped theme areas. Begin at nostalgic Main Street, with its turn-of-the-century shops, a silent cinema and an ice cream parlor. Move on to Adventureland where you can take a jungle cruise. After narrowly escaping a cascading waterfall walk over to New Orleans Square where you can listen to a Dixieland band just before lunch. The French Market in New Orleans Square is the largest of all the food facilities in the area. Take your pick of Southern fried chicken, creole belle peppers, seafood jambalaya, and barbequed ribs.

In Bear County watch the hilarious musical revue "Country Bear Jamboree" and in Frontierland step aboard a square masted sailing schooner. Sleeping Beauty Castle is the gateway to Fantasyland where you see all those familiar storybook characters from childhood — Peter Pan, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, and Dumbo the Flying Elephant.

In Tomorrowland try out the newest attraction — Space Mountain — where you travel through space on a six passenger rocket.

It has been a hectic day at Disneyland and you may discover you really need to come back again to see everything. Nevertheless, it's back to the hotel to prepare for your last evening in L.A.

Dinner tonight is at the Plaza Four restaurant followed by a musical at the Shubert Theater in the ABC Entertainment Center. The Center is located in Century City and is a complex of shops, restaurants, art galleries, two movie houses, the Playboy Club and the legendary Harry's Bar and American Grill.

After the show go back to the Plaza Four for drinks and backgammon.

MONDAY

After breakfast set out to explore the coastline along the Los Angeles area starting in Long Beach, where you can tour the fabulous cruise liner, the Queen Mary. The historic ship has made her permanent home in Long Beach Harbor and a municipal project has transformed it into a combination maritime museum, convention center and hotel (the Queen Mary Hyatt). Of the five decks, visitors have access to the upper decks where the Living Sea, an attraction created by Jacques Cousteau, is housed.

Next drive up the coast past Marineland of the Pacific to Marina del Rey, the largest man-made yacht harbor in the world. Have lunch at the famous Warehouse Restaurant. Looking like a setting from a Charlie Chan movie, the restaurant is housed in a typically labeled warehouse and inside there are crate boxes typically labeled for such destinations as China, Bangkok, India and South America.

You are just ten minutes from the L.A. Airport now so spend the balance of your stay here taking in the scenic coastline and shopping in the many quaint shops of this harbor community. Adjacent to the main sailing channel is the re-created New England fishing villlage — Fisherman's Village. Here shops and boutiques offer unique specialty browsing and buying.

If there's time before you must depart rent a bike and try the Marina del Rey-Santa Monica bike path connecting the marina with Picture Postcard Bay, seven miles north. Or take a harbor cruise or even rent your own boat. Wouldn't it be nice to simply miss that flight, maybe wave as it passes over the coastline before it changes course and heads for Chicago?

and has six miles of coastline featuring swimming coves and caves and magnificent beaches. Black's Beach, America's only nude beach, is nearby. Nudity will soon be illegal here, however, because the San Diego City Council recently revoked its approval of the nude beach after residents voted against it.

Finish your drive traveling south along the coast. If you see a particularly pretty spot you might want to stop and take a quick swim or maybe just sit on the beach and watch the setting sun.

You're close to the hotel so you can return and get dressed for dinner. Tonight try the Atlantis Restaurant on Mission Bay for dinner and dancing. It is billed as one of Southern California's outstanding restaurants and has won awards for the landscaping of its grounds.

You might want to take some time this evening to walk around Mission Bay Park. The bay, by the way, is a 4,600 acre aquatic park with boating, swimming and sailing. San Diego's famed Sea World, a beautifully landscaped aquatic garden, is on the south side of the bay. The kids would like the performing whales, porpoises and seals.

SUNDAY

We're off to sunny Mexico today. But before heading south of the border let's swing out east into the valley to visit Mission San Diego de Alcala. It was the first mission built in California and the building has been restored and is still used for services. This was the mission that was established in the Presidio in 1769 and moved to the valley six years later. The Mission museum has historic records and relics of the early mission days.

Pick up the freeway for a short ride to Mexico. Mexico is probably closer than you think. It's only a half hour ride from downtown San Diego.

You won't need an automobile permit to enter this part of Mexico and as long as you stay within 75 miles of the border and leave within 72 hours you won't need a passport or a visa. You also won't have to worry about changing your money because most people in Tijuana accept dollars. If you do want to have some pesos in your pockets though, just to jingle around, exchange your dollars at hotels or some of the tourist facilities. Most of the people here speak English, too.

A tourist information booth is located in downtown Tijuana if you need directions. Located right next to the booth is the Capri Restaurant. Try lunch here choosing either an international dish or something Mexican.

One of the biggest attractions in Tijuana is shopping in the many stores and market places. You can go wild over the bargains in leather, pottery and jewelry and search for souvenirs. While shopping, listen for the folkloric parade down the main street. It's scheduled at 2 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays during the winter season and is supposed to be very colorful. Too bad that the big sporting events, the bull fights for example, are only held during the summer.

Try to get back to the hotel a bit early tonight. You wouldn't want to be late for Anthony's Star of the Sea room. It is reputed to be one of the finest restaurants in San Diego. Located in the embarcadero area, it specializes in seafood and has a lovely view of the harbor. Specialties are flaming shrimp and clams Genovese.

Purchase tickets to a performance at the Old Globe Theater in Balboa Park at 8 p.m. The theater is an authentic reproduction of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London and is operated as a community enterprise. During the summer the National Shakespeare Festival is held here but during the rest of the year various Broadway and off-Broadway productions are presented.

Rise and shine because at 9 the famed San Diego Zoo opens its gates and you will want to spend as much time here as possible before boarding the flight home. Maybe it's a good thing you waited until now to visit San Diego's number one attraction. The weekend is over for most folks so the park shouldn't be crowded. For lunch snack on a hot dog — nothing fancy today.

The San Diego Zoological Garden is the largest and most beautiful zoo in the world. It has the world's largest collection of animals, more than 5,000, and most of the animals are displayed in settings duplicating their natural habitats. The zoo also is a lovely subtropical garden. You can simply walk around or take a bus tour or a cable lift over the park.

It's not a long drive to the airport. Turn in the rental car, check your luggage and board the flight. As we lift off the runway look out the window and see Mission Bay. See, there's your hotel!

Southern sites lure winter campers

Once considered a May to November diversion, camping has now become a year round activity, especially in southern states where campers are lured by clean, attractive, full-service campgrounds close to sunny beaches, ocean and river fishing, golf/tennis, boating and other attractions.

In Florida, for example, there are campgrounds within a stone's throw of Disney World, Busch Gardens, Silver Springs and the Everglades National Park.

On the campgrounds themselves facilities may include swimming pools, miniature golf, paddle tennis courts, boat marinas or fishing ponds.

Ideal for families who want to plan a vacation around school winter recess, retirees who may want a somewhat longer vacation in the sun or those who may just want a short escape from winter doldrums, camping is an economical vacation choice when compared to in-season hotel or motel prices. The average overnight campsite at a privately owned campground is $6.50 a family of four; $5.50 for two.

You can head for a southern camping vacation whether or not you own a recreational vehicle or tent. Many privately owned campgrounds have on-site rentals of tents or trailers at reasonable rates.

When planning a winter camping trip in a popular area it is smart to pick a campground which will reserve a campsite for you in advance. Kampgrounds of America, which has locations spread throughout the southern tier of the United States, is one system which will accept reservations.

A free directory to KOA campgrounds which will take you all the way to the sun is available at any KOA location in the nationwide network.

Depression work project is now a family attraction

What began as a work project during the Depression is now a showplace in Central Illinois.

Ten acres of colorful flower gardens and intricate, handmade rockwork, combined with a variety of interesting attractions makes Rockome Gardens near Arcola, Ill., a perfect place for a family outing.

The gardens were begun during the Depression by industrialist Arthur Marton who put his idled employes to work beautifying his estate. He decided to build the largest flower garden in Douglas County and so acres of coxcombs, marigolds, phlox and many other varieties of flowers were planted and bordered with rock fences made by cementing together stones gathered from throughout the state. The gardens grew lush and today they are the largest privately owned flower and rock garden in the U.S.

The present owner, Elvan Yoder, bought Rockome and some of the surrounding land which he intended to farm. Soon he decided to make the gardens his full-time work and open them to the public. Every year new features are added. One of the most popular is the recreated frontier Illinois village, Old Bagdad Town, which flourished and died on the banks of the Kaskaskia River not far away. Today Rockome's Bagdad is a busy community with bakery, barber shop, the Calico Craft Shop, and a livery with a harness maker and blacksmith.

Horse and buggy teams take visitors for rides around the gardens and visitors can sample freshly baked bread and hot cinnamon rolls from the bakery oven. At the Calico Craft Shop visitors can see candles being made by hand and the finished product is on display and for sale.

The original farmhouse at Rockome has been furnished in the style of many of the nearby Amish homes with Early American antiques and handmade quilts. The Indian Trading Post has a large collection of Indian arrowheads, most collected within miles of Rockome. A new attraction this year is Yoder's Grist Mill where guests can see flour made the old-fashioned way.

Children who visit Rockome Gardens always enjoy feeding the chickens and goats or climbing to the 35-foot high tree house or visiting the Haunted Barn.

Visitors can enjoy meals at Rockome's family-style Restaurant or Dutch Cooking at the Dutch Kitchen on Main Street in Arcola. The Rockome Store in Arcola sells Dutch cheese and an assortment of gift items.

Rockome Gardens is open from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day through Oct. 31. Arcola is about a 4-hour drive from the Northwest suburbs. It is located off I-57 about 30 miles south of Champaign.

Weekend

Phew! Those Yankees are finally going home

Armed with jeans, T-shirts, backpacks, and dreams of finding 50-cent-a-night hotels, they came. The first wave arrived in late May. The second came in June. The bulk of the attacking force hit in July, and a few managed to find their way over here for August.

But now, the retreat is on. They're leaving. It looks as if Europe has weathered another successful year of ("Phew!") American college kids.

During the 92 days of June, July, and August, the London Tourist Office believes it played host to more than 750,000 college-age American tourists.

In Amsterdam the tourist office estimates, "A quarter of a million, at least."

In Copenhagen they throw their hands up and say, "A bunch."

In Paris, one official for the French Ministry of Tourism repeats his speech of last year. "We stop counting after the first month."

The enormous popularity in Europe of American college sweatshirts has not exactly helped anyone who is counting. Throughout Europe everyone under 30 seems to be wearing them, even if they have no idea what the sweatshirts say. The universities of Texas, Arizona, and Michigan tend to be the favorites, followed by Princeton, U.S. Marines, and Fling United (whatever that is). One French company got on the bandwagon not long ago with a sweatshirt that supposedly represented a well-known university in the Boston area. However the French letter "w" is pronounced like a "v," so the sweatshirt proudly spelled out HARWARD

In spite of that, an office manager here for the SNCF, the French National Railroads, says, "There wasn't a train all summer that didn't have kids hanging out the windows. Who knows where they came from?"

Also during those last summer days, impromptu flea markets pop up.

Anything that has been toted around for the past three months but is too heavy to meet airline weight requirements gets sold to the highest bidder at the flea market closest to the plane leaving for the States.

This summer, unlike summers past, there were fewer problems involved in getting home. The airlines had not gotten into price wars and the smaller charter lines that advertised and supplied "low cost flights" at the beginning of the summer were still around to return the crowds.

And so, calmly exit the tourists. In a few places like Spain, the dollar was strong enough to save them some money. But in most parts Europe was more expensive this summer than it has ever been. Those 50-cent-a-night hotels now cost $7.

In the meantime, while tales of summer in Europe are filling the hallowed halls of Texas and Arizona and "Harward," the Europeans have regained control of the continent. They complain, "It's been a tough year." They commiserate with one another — all the way to the bank. And then, after looking at their profits one more time, they note they had better start getting ready, because it's going to happen all over again in just 8 months.

American Airlines offers free a colorful 32-page brochure entitled "Great Golf and Tennis Resorts."

It features a new 1977-1978 series of packages for club and racquet wielders interested in the sports in Arizona, California, Bermuda, Hawaii, Mexico and the Caribbean. You can get the brochure from your travel agency or American Airlines Tour Sales, 10 S. LaSalle, Chicago 60603.

Florida vacation program for seniors

Eastern Airlines has introduced a two-part Florida vacation program for senior citizens designed to give them up to a 20 per cent discount from regular-priced tour programs.

Available until Dec. 15, 1977, the senior program requires at least one tour participant to be 55 or older. One part of the program focuses on Orlando, the second part on other vacation areas of Florida.

In Orlando vacationers can enjoy either a four- or seven-night stay at a choice of hotels and take advantage of that city's Senior Season Festival, a series of events and discounts offered to senior citizens. Eastern's "Senior Set Vacation Sale" package provides air-conditioned accommodations for four nights, Eastern's exclusive Walt Disney World nine-attraction ticket book for admission to and transportation within the Magic Kingdom, and a choice of roundtrip transfers between airport and hotel and Walt Disney World or a rental car with unlimited mileage for four 24-hour periods.

The cost ranges from $47.30 to $61.50 per person, double occupancy, depending on choice of hotel. Optional attractions including transfers can be added for a small charge. There is also a seven-night version of the package which includes the same features plus admission to Sea World, Stars Hall of Fame, Circus World, Mystery Fun House and Wet N' Wild. Prices range from $102.25 to $209.20 per person, double.

If vacationers perfer to visit Miami, Ft. Lauderdale, Daytona Beach, St. Petersburg, Clearwater or Treasure Island, they can take advantage of Eastern's seven-night "Senior Set Vacation Plus." The package includes a choice of accommodations, and a choice of roundtrip airport transfers or rental car with unlimited mileage for seven 24-hour periods. In Miami and Ft. Lauderdale, a discount "Insiders' Directory" providing up to 50 per cent discounts on South Florida attractions is also included. Optional attractions can be added to the package for a small charge.

For complete information on Eastern's new senior vacations, contact your travel agent or call Eastern's local reservations phone number and request the Vacation Planning Desk.

Leisurely cruises to the Caribbean

Windmills, cathedrals and other symbols of centuries-old ties with Holland, Spain, England, and France are enjoyed by visitors to the multi-cultured Caribbean island world featured in this year's vacation programs by Delta Air Lines and Sitmar Cruises.

The Delta/Sitmar Air/Sea program enables vacationists to take advantage of considerable savings over the cost of purchasing separate air and sea tickets. The package air/sea price includes roundtrip jet coach transportation to Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, via Delta Air Lines, ground transfers to and from the pier, cruise accommodations, and all shipboard meals and activities, at least $132 less than separate arrangements would cost.

Sitmar's cruise ship in the Caribbean is the 25,000-ton luxury liner, the T.S.S. Fairwind, sailing from Port Everglades, Fla. Ten and 11-day voyages provide a rich array of ports, people, and experiences. These voyages have proved increasingly popular over the last two years because they offer the heart of a two-week cruise at substantially lower cost.

Passengers on 10-day cruises have their pick of two itineraries. The first begins with a sail to St. Maarten for fantastic buys in gold, silver and jewelry. Then it's on to bustling Fort-de-France, Martinique, to brush up on French and shop for perfume direct from Paris. Next are the beautiful beaches of St. Lucia and a call at Antigua, home of the British fleet during the Napoleonic wars. And, finally, passengers spend a day sightseeing and shopping in duty-free St. Thomas or snorkeling on nearby St. John. Cruises on this itinerary depart on Nov. 16 and Dec. 28.

The second, the newest 10-day itinerary features Barbados and Trinidad. You can sample the world-famous rum of Barbados or learn the limbo on Trinidad to the beat of steel bands and the finest calypso singers in the Caribbean. On your way to these islands you'll call at St. Maarten and St. Lucia and you'll cap your 10-day voyage with a stop at St. Thomas. Cruise departure date Dec. 7.

Eleven-day sails add the mystique of South America to a cruise vacation. En route, Fairwind calls at St. Maarten and St. Thomas. Then, the luxury ship puts in at La Guaira, Venezuelan gateway port to Caracas. Nestled at the base of 7,000-foot Mt. Avila, Caracas is an intriguing mixture of historical monuments, cosmopolitan hotels, cobblestone streets and super highways. And, passengers can fly from Caracas deep into the jungle to marvel at Angel Falls, highest waterfall in the world. On the return voyage from Caracas, the Fairwind stops in Aruba and Curacao, islands rich in Dutch heritage, beautiful beaches, and bountiful bargains.

Air/Sea package rates for 10-day voyages range from $915 to $1,520; 11-day rates from $1,000 to $1,665. Travel agents have full details.

The 10-passenger Fokker F-7 aircraft inaugurated Pan Am's first scheduled passenger flight from Key West to Havana Jan. 16, 1928.

Pan Am, United mark fifty year anniversaries

The year 1927 was a landmark year in the history of air travel. It was a year of firsts, a year when today's passenger airlines were just getting off the ground — so to speak.

United Airlines observed the 50th anniversary of the first transcontinental flight on Sept. 1. On Friday Pan American World Airways celebrates the 50th anniversary of its first transoceanic flight.

The first transcontinental flight was a 32½-hour adventure from New York to San Francisco with stops in Bellefonte, Pa., Bryan and Cleveland, Ohio, Iowa City and Des Moines, Iowa, Omaha and North Platte, Nebraska, Cheyenne and Rock Springs, Wyoming, Salt Lake City, Utah, Elko and Reno, Nevada, Sacramento and Oakland, California. The fare was $404 and tickets were sold with the understanding that if the plane became overloaded with mail, the mail had priority and the passengers had to go.

The transcontinental flight was created when routes of National Air Transport (NAT) and Boeing Air Transport (BAT) were linked in Chicago. NAT had the New York/Chicago run and BAT flew Chicago/San Francisco. In 1934 NAT and BAT were merged with two other airlines and became United Airlines.

The first transoceanic flight on Pam Am was launched Oct. 28, 1927, a one-hour adventure from Key West, Fla. to Havana, Cuba. The aircraft was a ten passenger Fokker F-7.

During the 1940s and 1950s advances were made toward passenger comfort and air travel became a luxurious way to get from place to place. In 1949 Pan Am introduced the Boeing Stratocruiser. Passengers could get staterooms with private washstands, berths, divans, clothes closets and reclining lounge chairs. They were escorted to a lower level of the aircraft for dining.

Pan Am will observe its 50th birthday Friday with a pole to pole flight on a Boeing 747SP. The flight leaves from San Francisco, flies over the North Pole to London, proceeds to Capetown, South Africa, then on to the South Pole. The return is via Auckland, New Zealand. The total distance will be 26,642 miles and estimated flying time is 48 hours and 40 minutes.

Tickets for the historic flight were offered to the general public at fares of $3,333 first class and $2,222 economy but all seats have been sold.

The reigning Miss Universe, Janelle Penny Commissiong of Trinidad, and Miss U.S.A. 1977, Kimberly Louise Tomes of Texas, will serve as co-hostess on the flight. Passengers will be treated to full meals and snacks, 24-hour bar and refreshment service, a selection of movies and games. Entertainment will include a fashion show, a strolling musician, a magician and a hairdresser for the ladies.

Joan Didion cares how the sunlight felt

by Madora McKenzie

Joan Didion is not a writer well known to the general public, at least not yet. She has also fallen prey to another type of anonymity, not as easily undone. That is the anonymity of misconception. There seems to be a large number of people who know of and even like her writing, but perceive her as either enigmatic, or mysterious, or oblique. Yet it was Joan Didion who started an essay once for Life magazine about her marriage with the statement, "I had better tell you where I am and why."

In person her speech is equally declarative.

"I am small," she admitted. "And people always perceive me as weak because of this." She has a low voice that gains volume as she gets a better sense of whom she is talking with and why. She smiles often, her laugh delicate as a silver bell caught in a breeze.

She does not look in the least enigmatic.

Dressed in a soft cotton floral print dress of muted fall colors. Miss Didion looked undeniably fragile, but both her writing and her lifestyle attest to her equally undeniable strength. She lived alone in New York for eight years after graduating from the University of California in Berkeley. She freelanced for Vogue, Mademoiselle, and Holiday while she wrote her first novel, "River Run," at night.

"I taught myself to type in high school by copying out sections of novels by writers like Ernest Hemingway so that I could understand the way they wrote." In so doing she demystified different writing styles, learning their rhythms and structure, much the way a scientist takes apart an atom, reducing it to protons, neutrons, electrons, energy. She understands the power grammar has over good literature. In an article she wrote for the New York Times called "Why I Write," she made this statement:

"To shift the structure of a sentence alters the meaning of that sentence as definitely and as inflexibly as the position of a camera alters the meaning of the object photographed."

Writer Joan Didion: soft spoken with a laugh like a silver bell.

For some, an exploration of her three novels, her collection of essays, or her several screenplays is a look through a glass darkly.

She feels one of the reasons she — and her books — are sometimes perceived as distant is that her characters and the people in her essays are often remote and secretive. She calls her characters "distracted," and yet presents them in such a straightforward manner that ultimately even the most oblique and bizarre behavior becomes plausible.

Her novels seem to be structured by clues, seemingly unimportant details that resurface to connect plot or support the often irrational logic of her characters.

"I never know how any of that is going to work out," she confesses. "The fun part is, of course, when the details pay off, when they connect in the reader's mind. But I don't plan any of them from the beginning."

As a writer she pays more attention to the subtle than the obvious. Images of how light looked or felt in Bolivia ("opaque and flat") stay with her and may be used later to set the tone of a book. "I always worry a lot, when I'm not working, that I'm missing things, that I'm not making the connections, that I'm not storing the stuff away that I'll need later — that I'm not remembering. But in the past I've worried about it, and then when I'm actually writing again, it all comes out. That's what's so impressive about the human mind. that is storing all this information, like a retrieval system, even when you're not consciously registering it. You gain a lot of respect for the mind when you write."

She also looks for clues to the way other writers structure themselves as well as their words, the way their lives work either for or against their writing.

"I was reading a biography on Edith Wharton recently and I was terribly impressed with her, although I just couldn't see how it could be. I was impressed with the extent to which her life was spent almost entirely away from other writers. She was married to a man who was not a writer, and there is a description in the book of Daisette, her summer home. It was always full of houseguests, and very well run. People would be served breakfast in their rooms, then work on their letters or whatever until noon, and then everyone would gather in the garden and Edith would appear and an excursion would be planned for the afternoon.

"Well, she was writing a novel a year in the morning then!! The degree of order she must have had, I've though about it a lot. For one thing the telephone didn't ring, but still, the degree of organization required to live that kind of life . . . When I'm working everything cuts off. There aren't any houseguests."

She is married to writer John Gregory Dunne, author of the just released "True Confessions" (Dutton, $9.95), with whom she has collaborted on several screenplays, most recently "A Star Is Born." "Writing with someone else is not a problem," she feels, "when you're doing a film. There isn't the same emotional investment in a script as when you're writing a novel. But movies are a great way to stay in shape until the next book is started."

As far as having a marriage partner doubling as a writing partner, she says, "for us it was never hard. I think one reason is we were both working before we were married. He was 30, I was 29, we'd both published books and we knew who we were. So it wasn't

Four keep appointments with the chair

DEATHWORK by James McLendon (Lippincott, $8.95).

Reviewed by Kurt Baer

James McLendon's "Deathwork" is a dark work of cition about to brush up against reality. It is the story of the rekindling of capital punishment at Raiford State Prison. Florida, after a hiatus of twelve years. And just as Florida, like Illinois, is grinding its way toward the actual resumption of lawful execution, "Deathwork" transports the reader to the ultimate electrocution of four murders on a single morning.

It is a story of characters in a death play:

Cabel Lasseter, veteran prison electrician. the man whose duty it is to test and retest the Death Machine so that the execution will be technically perfect.

Major John McPeters, 59-year-old straw boss at Raiford Prison, for whom university-spun theories of inmate rehabilitation have no meaning — the number two man who keeps order among guards and prisoners in the only way he knows, intimidation by brute force.

Morgan Kingsly, politically ambitious governor of the State of Florida who recognized the time was right for a capital punishment law but who is himself almost scared to death that something will go wrong at Raiford on the morning of the executions.

Lincoln Daniels, a Norman Mailer-like journalist commissioned to write a 30,000-word article on the execution for "Esquire," and Fred Billings, a cosmetic television newsman, one of the hundreds of reporters who have descended on Starke, Fla., "a Civil War town that had always been on the way to somewhere else," for a media circus that is a bruising indictment of the working press.

"Deathwork" is neither an advocate, nor an opponent of capital punishment except as the reader would and inevitably must have it. For if the act of execution is gruesome, and it is as McLendon describes it, the acts of the four condemned to die is, by the laws of man at least, no less unforgivable:

A nymphomaniac prostitute who poisoned her homosexual husband and their three children with a massive dose of digoxin, a heart stimulant, mixed into a dinner dish of mashed potatoes.

A sado-masochist college dropout convicted of the ferocious rape of five women.

A Cuban refugee and CIA-inspired assassin who was convicted of eight counts of murder following a Christmas Eve bombing and who was credited with the terrorist-style death of more than forty pro-Castro figures.

A cocaine-dealing, rich-living, Haitian-born giant who butchers his wife and her mother with a fireplace axe and then shoots down a Palm Beach patrolman before driving his Rolls-Royce to the police station to surrender.

McLendon sketches the history of each convict in a way that provides some social background for each criminal act, but leaves the lasting impression that the real victims in this story are the ones who suffered the lawless acts of the condemned.

And so each of them keeps an appoint-

An epic novel sure to become a bestseller

THE IMMIGRANTS by Howard Fast (Houghton Mifflin, $9.95).

Reviewed by Linda Punch

From the moment of his parents' death in the 1906 San Francisco earthquake, Daniel Lavette yearns to become part of the Knob Hill society. The son of an Italian Immigrant, Dan's only possession is his father's fishing boat. With hard work, shrewd business sense and the help of close friends, he parlays his meager beginnings into a position of wealth and power.

"The Immigrants" by Howard Fast is a story of the early part of the 20th Century in San Francisco. As seen through Lavette's eyes. Fast tells the story of Dan's rise to fame and power intertwined with the San Francisco earthquake, World War I and the stock-market crash of 1929. The places are as far-ranging as the characters, from the squalor of the wharves to the garish opulence of Knob Hill parlors.

While Dan seeks to become one of the scions of society on Knob Hill, he never loses touch with the immigrants and their children. His closest friends and ties are with his impoverished beginnings although he marries the daughter of a wealthy San Francisco banker and begins his climb up the ladder of success.

In all his ventures, Dan finds himself continually rejected by those he chose to emulate — the rich and established families of San Francisco. His applications for loans for new business deals are repeatedly turned down by his father-in-law's bank and he is rejected even by his wife.

Lavette finds both spiritual and financial backing from the friends of his youth — Anthony Cassala, an Italian immigrant reluctantly thrust into the role of banker after the earthquake; Mark Levy, a young Jewish businessman who joins Dan in his many business ventures; and May Ling, a Chinese mistress who stands by Dan despite his refusal to divorce his wife.

Fast's novel is peopled with a rich variety of characters. He attempts to go beneath surface descriptions to portray their actions and feelings, including Dan's continued attachment to his cold but beautiful wife.

The novel also is filled with vivid description of events and places. The earthquake is described as "the sound of a great inhuman beast growling and roaring, and then the stable eternal earth shook and trembled like a mass of jelly, and for forty-eight awful seconds this trembling continued. Brick buildings collapsed, furniture danced and skittered, plaster ceilings crumbled and fell, tall, steel-reenforced structures rocked and swayed and yet stood firm, but the older buildings of stone and wood crumbled in upon themselves."

Fast's book will please fans of the epic novel. He has all the elements of a best seller — a smattering of sex, numerous love affairs and a network of characters that could employ a large portion of Hollywood's actors and actresses.

The novel already has been purchased for a television mini-series and Fast is working on a second book which will continue the saga of the Lavette family.

MONTY by Robert La Guardia (Arbor House, $12.95).

Reviewed by Linda Punch

Montgomery Clift was the idol for a generation of moviegoers — a talented, classically handsome actor, critically acclaimed for both his stage and movie roles. He seemed to have the world at his feet, yet he died at age 45, the victim of a losing battle with deep psychological disturbances, drugs and alcohol.

Clift's private life and career are chronicled in "Monty: A Biography of Montgomery Clift," by Robert La Guardia. The author, who spent five years researching the book, attempts to delve beneath the public image of Clift to reveal a man destroyed by his own success.

Clift found fulfillment in acting and won acclaim almost from the beginning of his career. He appeared in a number of famous films and plays, often upstaging already established actors such as John Wayne. He created the moody, intense character later made popular by actors such as Marlon Brando and James Dean.

At the peak of his career, Clift inspired adulation from both men and women. Yet, the dark shadows of his private life began to encroach on his professional life.

La Guardia describes the contrasts in Clift's personality:

"He was an overnight sensation. Men and women loved him for the promise offered by his unthreatening masculine grace and looks. Bobby-soxers screeched and pounded the floors when his magnificent, sensitive face loomed in darkened movie theaters. Fan clubs popped up all over the country. Hollywood moguls found themselves forced to accede to his demands, their rigid control over actors shattered. He was a total enigma: a polite, well-brought-up young man who achieved great power in Hollywood passively, without deviousness.

"But for those people who saw Monty, the real Monty close up — who lived with him and ached with him — the images are very different . . . Monty walking against the wintry Manhattan wind, his shoulders hunched and body leaning heavily against a black man, his male nurse. Collapsing over and over, in a state of drunkenness, on the floor of a Fire Island house, as the homosexual boys and men, fatigued with picking him up, let him lie, and walk over him as if he were a piece of inanimate junk . . ."

Corman novel is well written and meaningful

KRAMER VERSUS KRAMER by Avery Corman (Random, $7.95).

Reviewed by Bernadine M. Rechner

Role reversal is becoming a cliche that conjures up humorous images of the househusband struggling to cope with dust, dishes and diapers.

Avery Corman in his novel "Kramer Versus Kramer" gives us another view of role reversal — that of a man whose wife has abandoned him and their four year old son, Billy.

Joanna Stern and Ted Kramer are part of the swinging singles scene in New York City. Both are college graduates; she works for an advertising agency, he is a magazine space salesman. They meet at a group house on Fire Island, are attracted to each other and, tired of the singles world, marry and settle down to middle-class family life in Manhattan.

They have a son but a couple of years at home with a toddler makes Joanna bored, restless and dissatisfied. She wants to go back to work. Ted is opposed on financial as well as philosophical grounds; a young child needs a mother at home.

She acquiesces and life goes on. Ted helps around the house but the 24-hour pressures of responsibility — for child, husband and home — take their toll on Joanna.

When Billy is four, Joanna announces she is leaving them both. Ted is astonished, confused and, at first, unbelieving.

"Kramer Versus Kramer" is the story of a man coming to grips with a situation he does not quite understand. It is the story of parental love and parental responsibility, of Ted and his son on the rocky road to adjustment.

Facing the situation, there are explanations to be made — to a four year old whose mommy has disappeared, to family, employer and friends. There is the search for a housekeeper, a brief divorce action, a child to be nurtured, an attempt to resume some kind of social life. There are money problems — the added expense of live-in help, the loss of two jobs in succession which bring Ted to the brink of financial ruin, despair and desperation.

Things get to running fairly smoothly and then, almost a year later, Joanna returns to New York, re-establishes residency and determines to get Billy back. It is a bitter custody battle that brings "Kramer Versus Kramer" to its conclusion.

Avery Corman is an award-winning writer of documentary films, articles and the novel "Oh, God!". In this latest book, he has woven a compelling story around believable people though the premise, for those who believe all mothers love motherhood, may be shocking. In spite of the fact that Corman's Joanna rejects woman's stereotyped "natural role," the author has laid the foundation for her actions so well, the reader can sympathize with and understand her plight.

There is sympathy and understanding for Ted and his son as well. The narrative is such that the reader, at varying times, will support first one, then the other Kramer until toward the end we, like the court, must make a final decision.

Corman's style is simple, smooth flowing and direct. He has a gift for dialogue that makes the reader hear, rather than see, the conversations of his characters. The Kramer's, their family and friends, come to life as intelligent people who experience the full range of human emotions.

"Kramer Versus Kramer" is a bittersweet tale of today that is well written, meaningful and good reading straight through to the end.

'Master of the short story' succeeds once again

THE CONSUL'S FILE by Paul Theroux (Houghton Mifflin, $8.95).

Reviewed by Charles Dickinson

The twenty stories in Paul Theroux's "The Consul's File" are like a score of diamonds cut out of the heart of backwater Malaysia.

Told by a young man "phasing out" the American consulate in Ayer Hitam, Theroux is as skillful creating the aura of an ancient Malay ghost as he is describing the heat.

Theroux has traveled these climes before in such works as "Saint James" and "The Great Railway Bazaar," which is that rarity: a best-selling travel book.

"The Consul's File" is a return to this steamy underside of Asia and each of the stories can stand alone or, as Theroux accomplishes in the end, tied together into a portrait of a land only half a world away but as alien as Mars.

Ayer Hitam, the narrator assures us, is not a prestige post in the U.S. State Department. There is little to do in the town. Kuala Lumpur is the nearest city.

From "Dependent Wife": "A road, some gum trees, a row of shophouses, three parked cars: Ayer Hitam was that small . . . But apparently this was all — this and a kind of low dense foliage that gave, in the way it gripped the town, a hint of strangulation."

He can find no explanation for the name, only that it means "Black Water."

Perhaps as a result of living in a dying town that has been abandoned by the rubber market, the characters in these stories all seem to be dying in one fashion or another. There is a hopelessness to their situations that shows itself in petty class distinction, prejudice and bitterness.

Most of the people of Ayer Hitam drink, waiting for the proper monent each day to begin. That they treat their drinking as a savior is a symptom of the place. The Malays and other natives seem to watch the rest with bemused expressions, waiting for that day when the foreigners leave and they have their land to themselves again.

It is not necessary to read the stories in order, although the first, introduces the narrator and his reasons for being in Ayer Hitam.

Start anywhere and you are likely to start with "The Autumn Dog."

Named after a sexual position particularly suited to fat men, this bit of psychological warfare between two women won Playboy's 1976 Writing Award for Best Fiction.

Early in the story Theroux displays one of his keenest talents as a writer: the ability to capture a character, or two, in a single line.

The two women are described: "They had dark reptilian tans and slouched langorously in the comfortable chairs like lizards sunning themselves on a rock."

"The Autumn Dog' is an O. Henry Award winner, a deft tale of feminine rivalry and these women's particular hatred for their husbands.

The one constant in Ayer Hitam is heat. There seems to be as many different types of heat as there are days in the year.

From "White Christmas": "It had just rained. The sky was low, and the trees still dripped. The smell of the rain was the smell of the dampened frangipanis, a hot close perfume of muddy blossoms and a cloud of humidity that weighted the bridge of my nose. It was only after the rain that I could smell the flowers, but the rain had brought an oppressive heat to the town that made Christmas seem absurdly distant."

There is the heat just before the monsoons, the heat of midday, the heat of an early morning and the heat of a sticky night. You can almost hear the big ceiling fans turn.

The heat, and the lassitude it forces relentlessly on the town, forces people to make changes in themselves to survive. In "Coconut Gatherer," Sundrum, Ayer Hitam's only novelist, survives through self-delusion.

His lone book published by a Chinese vanity house, Sundrum appears to the narrator as "a good man in a dull place. He was a happy soul . . . and I was glad for his very existence."

A year separates their only two meetings. In the first, the narrator is offered a copy of Sundrum's book. He reads it and finds it trite and boring.

A year later the identical scene is repeated. Sundrum offers a copy of the book, the narrator takes it home and reads it.

In that space of a year the narrator has come to understand the workings of Ayer Hitam. He knows now that men and women must bend themselves to the boundaries of their situations in order to survive, let alone flourish.

On a second reading Sundrum's book has a different effect. What was once trite was now original and there was no boredom in scenes and feelings the narrator himself experienced.

The narrator was becoming a part of Ayer Hitam.

There is a little of everything in 'The Consul's File.' Paul Theroux is a master of the short story and to pass up this collection is to pass up a trip to a land that holds more than a few similarities to our own.

One of the most revered, hated men in history

CROMWELL, by Roger Howell Jr. (Little Brown, $8.95).

Reviewed by H. J. Heller

In Catholic Ireland strong men weep and women curse at the mere mention of Oliver Cromwell — with considerable justification.

It was in September, 1649, that Cromwell's army sacked the Irish town of Drogheda. History records that practically the entire garrison and all its priests were put to the sword.

"I am persuaded that this is a righteous judgment of God upon these barbarous wretches who have imbrued their hands in so much innocent blood," Cromwell said of the massacre.

This was in keeping with Cromwell's penchant for praising the Lord for his (Cromwell's) actions.

According to author Roger Howell Jr., Cromwell gave two reasons for his actions at Drogheda:

"One was purely technical; the rules of war at that time allowed the slaughter of a garrison which refused to surrender when in a hopeless position. The second was based on military considerations. Cromwell hoped by this first forceful stroke to terrify the opposition into surrender."

The Drogheda tragedy was only one of many which by the end of 1649 saw much of Ireland's coast under Cromwell's control.

Howell, a professor and chronicler of English history, tries to walk a tenuous line between Cromwell's contribution as England's "only republican head of state," and his ruthlessness (almost always in the name of God) in crushing his enemies.

It's a difficult task. Cromwell's position as one of the most revered and hated men in English history makes impartial reaction to any analysis almost impossible.

To Irishmen generally Howell's book would appear to be an apology. Englishmen, whose forebears had to endure the absolutism ot Charles I, may hold a more charitable view.

The book traces Cromwell's rise from his first tentative ventures into politics to his death, when he held the post of England's Lord Protector. Only a small segment of the book deals with Ireland, but it is especially relevant today in view of the turbulence in Northern Ireland.

a question of starting out together. And we knew each other for a long time, six or seven years before we got married, though without keeping much company" (she laughs at this).

"What I mean is, we were good friends, we would go out to lunch together often. If I was in California, we would write letters (they were both writing in New York at the time). It wasn't so much a romance as 'Other Voices, other Rooms.' "

"The other terrific thing about being married to another writer is that one of us can usually support the household while the other person is writing a long thing. Had we not been married, I don't know how either one of us could have afforded to spend months in what appeared to be nonproductive ways."

Besides sharing the upbringing of a daughter, they also share a regular column in Esquire magazine, the authorship of which alternates between them each month. They had the same sort of arrangement with the Saturday Evening Post. Their writing is individual, if overlapping. They also help edit each other's works.

She says she even got the title for her newest book from her partner-husband, while driving from their beach home in Trancas, north of Malibu, to Los Angeles (about a 40-mile trip). She had wanted to write a story that took place in Central America, after spending an inspiring hour in the Panama airport with nothing much to do but take in details. But she also wanted to write a book about San Francisco. (She tends to place her books first and then discover the plot.)

So while driving that day into Los Angeles she announced her decision to make it all one book, that she was somehow going to "fold in all the various elements so that it would be like seeing more colors than you can possibly take in with one look." John Gregory Dunne offhandedly suggested she call the novel "A Book of Common Prayer," maybe because he though it would take a lot of prayer to get such a project off the ground. But then, after all, that's what writing really is anyway — an act of prayer."

Deathwork:

ment with "Ol' Sparky," or "The Thunderbolt," as Raiford's inmates call the Death Machine. A last ride in the fifty-year-old electric chair that Raiford convicts themselves had built will send 2,250 volts of household current for two full minutes from a death cap to a ground wire clamped to the convict's right leg.

Through Lincoln Daniels we learn that the electric chair was developed as a more humane method of execution, a modern-day alternative to defect-prone hangings.

But his description of the first person to be electrocuted, a convicted axe murder, William Francis Kemmler, who was executed Aug. 6, 1890 at Auburn Prison, south of Syracuse, N.Y., leaves us wondering if it is not ludicrous to think of any murder as humane.

"Kemmler's body lunged up out of the seat and into the chair's leather straps. A buzzing noise filled the room. The chair, which had not been properly bolted to the floor, began rocking up and down in a sickeningly grotesque death dance. While the horrified executioner Davis and the spectators looked on, the bare electrode on Kemmler's back dried his skin out and his flesh started to burn, sending a pungent blue smoke out over the witness gallery.

"For five minutes this kept up, with most of the witnesses becoming sick or turning away in terror. Finally the current was turned off, but, to the total horror of those present, Kemmler's chest seemed to be moving and a purple liquid bubbled from his gray lips.

"His whole body had turned a bright red . . . Quickly the warden signaled Davis to turn the current back on. Over and over again for four minutes Davis gave Kemmler's body a series of short charges of voltage, a procedure that caused a blue flame to run up and down the dying man's spine.

"Finally the thing was over."

McLendon tells us that the Death Machine has been "refined" since that 1890 initiation. But the process is much the same.

In the end, there are no winners. The condemned and their victims, governor, warden, electrician and executioner, newsmen and their public — we are all in one way or another, the losers — in "Deathwork."

Olga knows

ARIES (March 21-April 19): As determination stomps in the door, apathy floats out of the window. And let's face it, Ari, it's about time! You get chance to show off your skills. Week ends with a holler.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Number three (or multiple of three) plays key role this week. You move toward personal goal. Read. Study. And remember, dear Taurus, that you are a trinity: mind, heart and spirit.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Love is offered. Accept, accept. Then you will raise your sagging morale and lower your blood pressure — all in one fell swoop!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Personal problem takes priority this week. Get help from one who has been down the same garden path. On last day, alley cat may come prowling. Hide the tuna.

LEO (July 23-August 22): Don't permit yourself to become trapped by boredom, Leo, for when bored you tend to behave in self-destructive fashion. Call that certain person who always gives your spirit a lift. You know who. Now, scoot!

VIRGO (August 23-September 22): Contact old friend/flame. Talk, laugh, love and maybe even cry a little. Honest emotions mustn't be held back. Last day should find you humming.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22): You're a bit of a rascal, Libra, but this week your rascality could get you in dutch with The Duke. (Not to mention the Dutchess, who is an absolute terror!)

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): Happy Birthday, Scorp! Yours is the sexiest sign in the Zodiac. You are dynamic, passionate, curious, strong-willed, imaginative and uninhibited. Jealousy and temper are your fatal flaws. December and June memorable months in year ahead. A struggle is resolved.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21): Deal with old problem in new way. Difficulty must be approached from several angles. Reassessment is inevitable. The answer, Saj, is not necessarily in the back of the book.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19): Cupid may use you for target practice this week, Cap, so if your life is already too complicated, don't sit still. Be a moving target. Week ends with a holler.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18): Week favorable for building. Use energy to building bridges, not walls. By end of week, you realize that you've done it again. You've topped yourself!

PISCES (February 19-March 20): You and Scorp may tangle this week. You're both water signs, and can get along rather swimmingly if you try. Seas apt to be rather choppy as week churns to noisy fini.

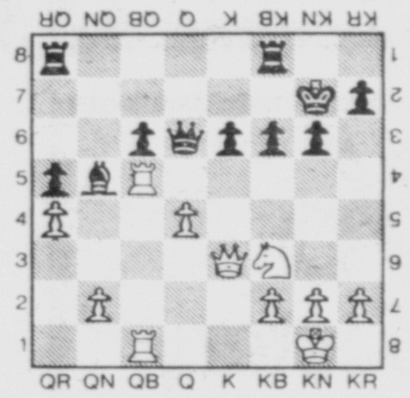
On chess

BEGINNER'S CORNER — Hint and explanation: Set up and execute a discovered attack.



WHY NOT 1....BxP?

Suave, gallant, a lover of poetry, Boris Spassky was dealt a harsh blow by reality and the mailed chess fist of a certain Robert Fischer in the summer of Reykjavik, 1972. Young women wept, men held back their tears, but deeply wounded Spassky, a sportsman of sportsmen, uttered not a word of excuse or complaint, though he had much cause for both.

Since then he has been in the chess doldrums, as he has stumbled in one mediocre effort after another. But now one notices that Caissa, the goddess of chess, is singing with especial joy; for Boris Spassky has again assumed his rightful place among her pantheon of heroes and champions.

His decisive victory over the Hungarian Lajos Portisch has qualified him to play Viktor Korchnoi for the right to vie with World Champion Anatoly Karpov for the world title.

According to Reuters, Spassky "played with daring and imagination" against Portisch. His best games in that match showed exceptional piece maneuvers and elegant breakthroughs for decisive victories.

Spassky who expressed assurance and confidence in victory before the match stated that he was the best qualified of the challengers to beat Karpov, though in an interview to Yugoslav journalist Boris Paravonovich he admitted: "the world has a champion equal to the name."

It is ironic that Spassky who, though living in France, was seconded in the later stages of his match with Portisch by his countryman Ex-World Champion Vassily Smyslov, is now taking the role of nemesis against the present scourge of Soviet grandmasters, the anathemous emigre-defector Korchnoi.

In the thirteenth game in SOLVE-IT, Spassky brought things to a head with a devastating offer of a knight (34 N-R5!). Though Portisch tried a counter sacrifice (34 . . . NxQP) before accepting Spassky's proffered piece, he lost in a few moves.

Stamp notes

The Canada Post Office on Oct. 26 will release three yule stamps based on the first Canadian Christmas carol "Jesous Ahatonhia."

Originally written in the Huron language by Father Jean de Brebeuf, the carol is also well known in English and French. All three languages appear on the stamps, making them the country's first trilingual issue.

The adhesives have a distinctly Indian flavor and were designed by Robert G. White of Stroud, Ontario. They will be printed in 10-cent, 12-cent and 25-cent denominations by the Canadian Bank Note Company of Ottawa in five color lithography.

Collectors may obtain mint stamps and request first day cancellations from "The Philatelic Service, Canada Post Office, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada K1A OB5."

* * * *

The U.S. Postal Service has authorized Sunday cancellations at three locations: Nov. 20 at Cumberland, Md. 21502 marking the beginning of the First National Road; Dec. 11 at Indianapolis, Ind. 46202 marking the state's admission to the Union, and Dec. 18 at Trenton, N.J. 08608 to commemorate that State's admission to the Union.

The cancellations are the standard circular ones normally in use at the post offices.

Modified procedures for ordering first day cancellations, which went into effect in January, are creating some confusion among collectors.

The Postal Service is reminding collectors that only the stamp being issued in the first day city, and any previously issued mint stamp, may be affixed to covers being sent in for cancellation within the 15-day limit.

Some collectors have apparently affixed stamps issued after the first day of issue but still within the submission time limit. The problem apparently arose with the Peace Bridge stamp issued Aug. 4. A number of collectors affixed the Herkimer stamp, released Aug. 6, to their covers. Since that adhesive was not eligible for the Aug. 4 cancellation the covers were returned unserviced.

Ireland, on Nov. 3, will release three Christmas stamps in denominations of 8p, 10p and 17p. All three will bear a painting of "The Holy Family" done by Giorgione, an Italian painter of the early 16th Century.
